Executive Summary

Recommendations for the Competition Act:

1. Eliminate Section 96, a clause that serves to greenlight mergers in spite of harms to competition and consumers.
2. Make it possible for the Competition Bureau to consider labour-related harms to workers (e.g. cutting decent jobs) as negative outcomes to prevent under its mandate.
3. Set bright line rules that ban acquisitions for the most dominant firms in the market.
4. Remove any mandated timelines placed on the Competition Bureau's review process, opening up the Bureau's authority to examine past mergers.
5. Put the burden of proof on monopolies to demonstrate how their actions do not harm competition or consumers — not the other way around.
6. Provide broad information-seeking powers for the Competition Bureau when studying deals and markets.
7. Enhance the powers of the Bureau to study and take action against problematic markets, not only concerning buyouts.
8. Provide a private right of action with damage compensation against dominant market behaviour, so private entities can support and supplement Bureau enforcement activity.
9. Tell Canada what you heard — and what you plan to do about it. Release a public summary of the recommendations received through this consultation, along with all original submissions and a clear and time-bound plan for next steps.

Introduction

The Competition Act is failing Canadians. Charged by its purpose clause with “maintaining and encouraging competition”, in practice the Act has enabled an accelerating decline in competition and consolidation of markets across multiple industries and sectors.

Canada's grocery, banking, telecom and media sectors are amongst the most concentrated amongst OECD countries, ranging in severity from the top 5 retailers controlling an estimated 76% of the market (groceries) to the top 3 companies controlling near 90% (telecom)<sup>12</sup>.

Canadians also depend on increasingly-concentrated foreign digital services run by platform gatekeepers, including digital search with 92% of the market held by Google<sup>3</sup>, mobile app stores dominated by Apple and Google<sup>4</sup>; and digital ads distribution markets dominated by Meta, Amazon, and Google<sup>5</sup>.

Concentrated and persistent market power is increasingly endemic in Canada, and causes many more harms than simply inflated consumer prices; it slows industry innovation, weakens Canada's economic competitiveness vis-a-vis our global peers, and distorts the regulatory environment itself.

Some commentators and participants in this consultation will argue the Act is fundamentally fit to purpose, with only minor procedural improvements needed. OpenMedia and Ekō fundamentally disagree. As pointed out by both the OECD and ISED's own analysis, Canada's competition laws provide amongst the weakest protections of any developed economy against the encroachment of dominant market power<sup>67</sup>. That's increasingly out of step with the times. Countries around the world are heavily updating their competition laws to reflect the widespread realisation that a minimalist, laissez-faire approach to antitrust focused on price measures alone has failed to prevent concentrated market power across many industries that negatively impact consumers, competitors, and even governance and regulation of their sectors<sup>8</sup>. Starting from a weaker position than our peers, competition law in Canada must be more drastically reformed and reoriented to catch up to this urgent global moment.

Today Canadians are defended by a competition authority that is structurally barred from: looking backwards to assess, learn from, or change the results of its own decisions, looking forwards to predictable, foreseeable but not immediately-quantified harms, and even looking outward across many Canadian markets that almost certainly have large competition harms within them. The odds of being caught or punished for quiet anti-competitive conduct in Canada are low, while opportunities to engage in it are numerous. That has built a Canadian economy characterised by disproportionately low investment, low entrepreneurialism, ageing and

People in Canada deserve much better. In total, members of the OpenMedia community and Ekō community have taken action over 23,800 times calling on our government to reform the Competition Act, to prevent the formation of further industry monopolies and oligopolies in our country and break up the sclerotic dominant players that have emerged. A properly reformed Act must recognize that persistent and/or growing market dominance is problematic, and worthy of study and regulatory measures in all circumstances. It must equip a strengthened Bureau and people in Canada with a full toolkit to contest the holders of market power.

Today's formal submission has been authored by OpenMedia and is endorsed by fellow civil society organization Ekō. This submission expands on the principles of OpenMedia's Anti-Monopoly Charter — a set of core statements demanding a competitive, fair, and affordable Canada — and describes how the Act can be reformed to serve all Canadians, not the narrow commercial interests of the shareholders of our largest businesses. This submission is delivered alongside over 400 unique comments from members of the OpenMedia community, and 10,081 and 13,325 petition signatures from the OpenMedia and Ekō communities, respectively. Each community's list of petition signers as well as all comments are attached in full as appendices at the end of the submission.

"It's been apparent for years (decades?) that there is no competition amongst the big three telecoms. Their pricing and offerings are aligned, so there is no choice for consumers. Worse still, they create the illusion of choice with their myriad of flanker brands. Consequently, we are forced to pay significantly higher costs, relative to most developed countries, for essential telecom services. All Canadians are subject to the pricing whims of our telecom oligopoly due to outdated competition legislation and lax government oversight/enforcement."

I. Monopolies are taking over Canada.

Monopoly rule in Canada is intensifying — and it's harming ordinary people, deepening our cost of living crisis, and breaking our economy.

Extremely uncompetitive markets like telecom, grocery, and online marketplaces ensure monopolies get away with doing harm to the Canadian public. Price alone is simply not an adequate measure. There are dozens, if not hundreds of ways in which companies with too large a hold on their market create harm for the public interest — from creating walled gardens around their customers, failing to pursue innovation, holding excessive lobbying power, stealing and selling people's sensitive personal data, crushing new and independent businesses, and directly threatening service withdrawal.

Food retail. To illustrate, consider the Canadian grocery sector. According to food policy experts at York University, our country's food system is one of the most concentrated globally. Analysis by the USDA supports that assertion, reporting that a mere five retailers — Loblaws, Sobeys, Metro, Costco, and Walmart — control the vast majority of the Canadian grocery market. This lack of competition has allegedly enabled tacit collusion such as price fixing, to the financial detriment of ordinary people in Canada and the financial gain of grocery giants. Companies such as Loblaws and Metro have also recently reported record profits while customers continue to pay exorbitant prices to meet their basic needs, with no apparent end in sight.<sup>12,13,14,15,16</sup>

Sports and entertainment. A similar story has plagued the ticket sales and distribution sector for many years. The largest player in entertainment ticketing in North America, Ticketmaster, has come under fire in recent months for using its market dominance to exploit customers and harm competition. A pending U.S. class-action lawsuit alleges Ticketmaster engaged in pricing discrimination and price fixing during ticket sales for Taylor Swift's 2023 Eras Tour. Ticketmaster's anti-consumer behaviour is well documented in Canada; in 2019, a Competition Bureau investigation into misleading prices led to Ticketmaster paying $4.5 million in fines. While that amount would be mind-boggling to the average person, such penalties amount to nothing more than a slap on the wrist for giants that rake in billions in profits each year. In the time since receiving this penalty, Ticketmaster has maintained its monopolistic hold on the market and continues to bully and exploit Canadian customers.<sup>17,18</sup>

Telecommunications. In our telecom sector, the deeply concentrated market and free reign of oligopolistic firms has led to Canadians paying some of the highest prices in the world for cell phone and Internet services. The presence of independent players in the market as challengers to the incumbents is a fundamental requirement for the existence of competitive pricing and innovation; however, the dominance of only a handful of giants in the Canadian telecom market has proven devastating for the ability of independent competitors to remain afloat. In the last year alone, telecom giants' market power has grown at an unprecedented rate; excluding the Monopolies do not just benefit from these unfair systems — they build them. Monopolies cajole and bully regulators and policymakers into policies and practices that favour their large corporate interests over ordinary people. The widely perceived sympathy of former CRTC chair Ian Scott to the interests of Bell, Telus and Rogers — culminating in his controversial photographed meeting alone with Bell's CEO Mirko Bibic at an Ottawa pub just shortly after Bell filed its appeal of the CRTC's 2019 wholesale rates decision — was accompanied by years of regulatory paralysis, as promised decisions languished unacted upon, and declining competition was ignored. ISED's new policy direction to the CRTC arguably implicitly recognizes this failure with its insistence on faster and more effective rule-making.<sup>22</sup> Google's lobbying tactics and perceived use of its market dominance to make threats have also come under growing scrutiny and critique<sup>23,24</sup>. These are merely a few examples of many that illustrate the undue influence monopolies hold over regulation and policymaking in Canada — a power used to crush competition and enforce unfairly high pricing.<sup>25,26,27</sup>

The inherent relationship between competition and affordability cannot be overstated. Now more than ever, it's critical that we ensure every person in this country can access high-quality, affordable Internet. As stated by the Government of Canada in its 2019 Connectivity Strategy: "It is not enough for a service to be available, for if the cost is out of reach, Canadians cannot take advantage of it." Those who have limited access to high-speed Internet, or cannot access it at all, are increasingly restricted from full and equal participation in our society and economy.<sup>28</sup>

Survey results from recent years suggest that a lack of affordable options for home Internet has a direct impact on digital adoption for many households. According to a 2020 report by the Leadership Lab and the Brookfield Institute, nearly 2 out of 5 households in Toronto do not have Internet at home that meets the CRTC's download speed target of 50 Mbps; of this group, the top reported reason was monthly cost of service (49%). The same study also found that worries about affording home Internet bills affected approximately 1/3 of Toronto households surveyed — especially low-income households, single-parent families, newcomers, and communities of colour. WhistleOut's 2021 survey supports these findings, with 40% of respondents saying that a 5% increase in their monthly Internet bill would be untenable. The same survey also found that 91% of respondents are concerned about Canada's Internet prices continuing to get more expensive, with 3 out of 4 saying they are "moderately to extremely worried about it".<sup>29,30</sup>

The burden of our unaffordable Internet falls especially heavily on some of Canada's most vulnerable populations, such as seniors, those with health conditions, those living in overcrowded housing, and people with lower incomes. For seniors, changes in income directly impact their Internet utilization rates. Only 54% of seniors with incomes under $20,000 use the Internet, compared with 73% and 79% for seniors with household incomes of $60,000-$79,999 and >$100,000, respectively.<sup>31</sup>

“...One of the main issues I have faced due to monopolies is the lack of choice in the marketplace. For instance, with Bell, Rogers, and Telus dominating the telecommunications industry, I have found it difficult to find alternative providers offering competitive pricing and better services. This limited choice has forced me to accept substandard services and pay inflated prices for basic amenities such as internet, mobile, and cable services.

Moreover, I have been negatively impacted by the practices of Loblaws in the retail sector. With their dominating presence and control over supply chains, it has led to a lack of competition in the market, which I believe has resulted in higher prices and reduced product variety for consumers like myself. The inability to access affordable and diverse products has put a financial strain on my household, making it harder to meet our daily needs...”

- Oral G., Ontario

II. Our laws should protect people, not corporate giants.

In a system where overwhelming imbalances still tilt results heavily towards powerful interests, only a tilt against power can produce something close to justice. The Competition Act has wholly lost track of that dynamic. Rather than stand up to monopolies, this complicated and ineffective piece of legislation has long helped dominant firms consolidate power to the detriment of the public.

In the telecommunications sector, Bell’s 2017 acquisition of Manitoba Telecom Services (MTS) was a case that caught the attention of the Canadian public — and illustrates the ways in which the Competition Act routinely enables business interests in spite of known consumer harm. After the acquisition, Bell’s market share grew to more dominant levels in Manitoba, and telecom bills increased for Manitobans. MTS was a long-established regional telecommunications provider in Manitoba that offered wireless, broadband, and IPTV services to both retail and business customers. When Bell moved to purchase MTS to grow its market share in the province, the Competition Bureau opted not to challenge the buyout; the Bureau had insufficient ability to prove that Bell-MTS would lead to a substantial lessening of, or harm to, competition in a manner that would satisfy the Competition Act's limited scope — even though such a threat credibly existed.<sup>32,33,34,35,36</sup>

The outcome of Bell-MTS was a feature, not a fluke, of our competition laws. Only six years later, history has repeated itself with Canada's disturbing failure to block the Rogers-Shaw deal — our most recent and comprehensive test of the Act and the Competition Bureau's authority. Under functional legislation, the Bureau should have had no difficulty whatsoever in successfully blocking Rogers, a dominant firm, from significantly growing its market power by acquiring mid-size competitor Shaw. To anyone with the ability to observe the facts, Rogers-Shaw presented a clear loss of competition, and a threat to affordability and jobs. But despite abundant evidence, the Competition Bureau was not able to meet the burden of proof required by the Competition Act to justify blocking the deal in the eyes of the Competition Tribunal.<sup>37,38,39</sup>

If this pattern holds, the next major buyout in Canada will push us past the point of no return. We cannot let that happen. Our Competition Act must be swiftly reformed to prioritize the public interest instead of tipping the scales in favour of giants.

Eliminate Section 96, a clause that serves to greenlight mergers in spite of harms to competition and consumers. It is crucial that the government eliminate loopholes in the Act that unfairly stand to benefit giant firms in the merger review process. In Canada, monopolies wield a legal trump card: Section 96, the “efficiencies defense” is a clause which currently allows giants to merge or complete an acquisition even if it could result in less competition. Put simply, companies can argue that the merger will enable them to be more efficient in the way they operate — even if the deal will cause demonstrable harm to competition. Presently, the Competition Bureau is forced to heavily weigh these proposed efficiency gains when evaluating whether a merger or buyout should be allowed, resulting in the Bureau tolerating deals they otherwise wouldn't. This is unacceptable for a number of reasons.<sup>40,41</sup>

Firstly, a focus on efficiencies deprioritizes the protection of consumers, small businesses, and vulnerable groups. The resources of the private sector far exceed that of civil society, the Bureau, and public institutions to produce data required to meet the burden of proof establishing that “efficiencies” exist; this all but guarantees that companies seeking to merge can easily present arguments that claim to show benefits outweighing the harms. Even if such harms abundantly exist, the burden of proof is so high on under-resourced groups that it becomes impossible to prove. In addition, Section 96 is out of step with international standards. Elsewhere, such as the U.K. and Australia, efficiencies are only a component in deciding if a merger will harm competition — not a defence in itself, as is the case in Canada. Under Canada's Competition Act, the efficiencies defence can also permit a merger in spite of the harm it will do to competition due to the methods used to measure said efficiencies. With Canada also dragging behind our international peers in metrics such as telecom affordability, it stands to reason that we have strayed off course in our policy approach to competition.<sup>42</sup>

The best solution is to strike Section 96 from the Competition Act entirely. From the perspective of ordinary people, the efficiencies loophole boils down to this: it doesn't matter if a corporate buyout will hurt you, so long as the companies involved will benefit. This clause has no place in a system that the Canadian government claims supports competition, affordability, and the consumer interest.

Harms to workers arising from mergers must be considered. The revised Act should also make it possible for the Competition Bureau to weigh labour-related harms to workers in their decisions — the flip side of corporate efficiencies. Such harms to workers are well-documented; for example, in the U.S., T-Mobile promised its massive buyout of Sprint would create new jobs. But in fact, the Wall Street Journal reported that the company actually cut jobs after the acquisition. If the Bureau must consider how companies can save money by consolidating, they should be required to weigh the worst-case scenario for harm to workers as a result of that

"Where do I even begin, from price gouging on bread (where we got back 25 bucks after years of overpaying), to several hundred dollar lawn tickets at concerts due to dynamic pricing, to arguing with Rogers every year to get another discount for my ridiculously priced internet which I don't even get the speed advertised.....why? What is the government doing to support us? If they are working on this, what aren't they making the public more aware? This is just the small stuff, where is the support on housing, healthcare, support for education etc? These issues affect us all with monopolies in literally every facet of Canadian life. Please help us."

III. We need real ways to hold monopolies accountable and prevent them from getting any bigger.

Weak in construction and flimsy in practice, today's Competition Act is not cut out for the job of curbing further market consolidation. The Act provides neither adequate mandate nor resources for the Bureau to proactively investigate and remedy competition problems or dysfunction. The Bureau has a limited window in which it can make an impact on competition problems in a market. Even for a highly concentrated sector like telecom, this window is generally only open when a dominant player attempts to buy out a smaller player. As such, there is little to no opportunity to meaningfully improve market competition — only narrow attempts to stop it from getting worse, which are prone to failure for reasons outlined above.

While the Bureau's human and informational resources are limited, the ability of ordinary Canadians to express or defend their interests when it comes to competition is near non-existent. Meanwhile, Canada's most powerful companies face tremendous opportunity for increased profits by successfully defending their interests against our weak system, and largely succeed in doing so. The volume of market data processed daily is increasing exponentially, and as more and more transactions are managed in micro-seconds by inscrutable algorithmic processes, the opportunities for undetected abusive conduct are also exploding.

Redressing this growing imbalance will be a multi-step correction that must draw on several sources of proactive correction, including:

Put the burden of proof on the giants. If a company wishes to buy out another, it should be their responsibility under the Competition Act to demonstrate why their merger won't hurt competition, rather than the other way around. A responsibility on merging parties to quantitatively demonstrate net benefit to consumers, as exists in several European countries, would be better<sup>45</sup>.

Set bright line rules that ban acquisitions for the most dominant firms. The Act should outright prevent already-dominant companies in the market from buying other companies, with particularly tight restrictions on telecom monopolies.

Remove any mandated timelines placed on the Competition Bureau's review process. The Competition Bureau should be allowed to re-evaluate a merger or buyout at any time, even if it's already happened. At present the Bureau cannot retroactively look at a deal's impact on the market — even if it has since caused harm to competition and affordability, and even if the conditions the Bureau hoped would prevent harm have clearly been circumvented. It sets the Bureau up as nothing more than a speed bump to a potentially-harmful merger; once cleared, the deal is home-free.

Broad information-seeking power for the Bureau is necessary. The Act must arm the Bureau with the ability to solicit any information reasonably required from dominant market players to assess their position. This is needed both during potential mergers and acquisitions, and for proactive market studies the Bureau conducts to evaluate potentially problematic industries.

Proactive market study and action are both needed. The Bureau must be equipped to conduct exploratory studies of the market concentration and dominance features of Canadian industries, and apply remedies, penalties or even require divestment as needed if there are serious, persistent or growing problems, as comparable agencies in other jurisdictions can and do. This power must include the ability to revisit its past decisions and determine if remedies have proven effective for preventing harm or concentration, and apply new conditions if they have not. It should include the ability to detect and act against so-called “creeping rollups”, in which many small competitors are acquired over time to a level that has plainly anti-competitive outcomes, but does not trigger current size-based merger review provisions of the Act.

The Bureau must set the timeline tempo. The Rogers-Shaw buyout showcased to Canadians how the Competition Tribunal hastily cut off its own consideration timeline to meet artificial financial deadlines set by Rogers and Shaw, that were then easily extended by several months when more powerful government agencies spoke up. Both institutions charged with thoughtful, apolitical evaluation of such deals must in the future be allowed to set their own timeline for appropriately evaluating a given deal. In the event that mandated timelines are still included in the Act, they should at very least start only once the Bureau becomes aware of a pending deal, to prevent gamesmanship by companies who conceal their activity to run out the clock.

A private right of action that pays compensation is needed. People deserve to be heard, and the difficulty and uncertainty for them of mounting a case chronicling harms they may be suffering due to market power use must be compensated. Under the next version of the Act, private citizens should have the right to bring forward cases and complaints of companies’ anti-competitive behaviour to the Bureau, and receive damages if they do so successfully. Further, formal mechanisms should be developed to solicit and duly consider qualitative and quantitative testimony from everyday people and civil society representatives in proceedings that evaluate corporate mergers and dominant behaviour that impact our lives.

“I truely [sic] despise the high prices and poor service caused by the lack of competition in major industries such as telecom, grocery and banking within Canada! The government of Canada does not appear to be making any attempt whatsoever to break up these huge monopolistic giants that charge high prices to make record profits off the backs of Canadian citizens that have no choice but to use their services and buy their products. My monthly budget is super tight and my wife and I are barely squeaking by as a result of the price gouging by businesses such as Loblaw's, Bell and Scotiabank to name just a few of these evil mega corporations. A reasonable profit is never enough for these companies. They always need more they will do what ever it takes to continue making record profits. We have three options to stop this attack on Canadian Citizens: 1. Break up these giant corporations and allow more competition to enter the market or 2. Nationalize these basic services that everyone relies on and 3. A combination of both methods. Unfortunately, politicians that work for the Government of Canada work for and are much more interested in serving the needs of Canada's corporate giants. Corporate welfare is very much alive and well in Canada.”

- Tyson M., Alberta

“The only power that an individual has against any company that you are unsatisfied with is to take your business elsewhere. However, in Canada in many cases there is NO ELSEWHERE to go! Bell and Rogers control almsot [sic] all the options, frankly they are interchangeable in terms of how they treat customers and we have no other viable options...When there is no healthy competition in the market then there is little pressure to improve. This also applies to Ticketmaster which has an obscene amount of control of the market and to a lesser extent Loblaws too is the HUGE player in their sector (and getting bigger all the time). What happened to anti-trust legislation, anti monopoly policy. Rogers and Shaw shouldn't be allowed to unite for this very reason. We need more choice, more options in all areas of our economy. The government should ensure that we get it."

- Sheila H., Ontario

IV. Monopolies threaten democracy and a fair society.

Every persistent monopoly or oligopoly in Canada is a policy failure. Temporary monopolies and abnormal profits may be a reasonable short-term reward for innovative new products and services, but where this concentration and outsized profit persists year after year – particularly with little sign of notable innovations – action must be taken against them.

The pressing need to disrupt our growing monopolies is not solely about cheaper prices, or even just where we can spend our money; it is also about preserving an equitable distribution of power in Canadian society. Despite claims that competition legislation should not consider supposedly 'non-economic' features, that concern was plainly understood at the birth of the antitrust movement. For the last 40 years, Canada has experimented with a purely quantitative price-based understanding of competition law, and the result has been a failure on every level, including ensuring the economic price and innovation dividend that lax attitude was supposed to deliver. As US Antitrust Assistant Attorney General Jonah Kanter says, "freedom in the workplace, the marketplace, and the polling place go hand in hand".<sup>46</sup> Media monopolies and effective online information monopolies may be particularly concerning as they can uniquely influence what information is investigated by journalists, distributed to citizens, and used to inform our collective decision-making. There is a pressing need to ensure a long-term diversity of sources and perspectives for our information diet, online and off, which competition policy alone can support but not fully provide.

Nonetheless, the more powerful and centralized Canadian industries become, the more the wants of a small set of private stakeholders are incorrectly read as representing the needs of a healthy market system. Google's recent threats to withdraw news from Canadian search results highlights the poverty of a purely price-based understanding of our collective welfare; power matters, and only a widely distributed, easily substitutable network of delivery for all our core services will keep Canadians safe from future ethically suspect attempts to veto public policy objectives by owners of monopolised services.

"A properly run, respectful countries [sic] must have respect for all people and human principles grounded in fairness. Consider what the long term monopolies do to the country and its people. I am sure you know. Think!"

- Kyriakos S., Quebec

"It seems that Canadian "democracy" has installed a government that bends more to the wishes of lobbyists for large corporations than to the electorate at large. This "corporatocracy" [sic] clearly focuses more on profits than taking an overall view of the benefits to the country with regard to quality of life and environmental sustainment. There seems to be a constant flow of price increases from the large corporations which the government is unable to, or uninterested in dealing with. This on-going corporate gouging encourages and promotes price increases in smaller businesses also, as, it may be that the thought is "if they can get away with it why can't we?". Corporations should be able to make reasonable profits without public subsidy (carbon fuel companies and telecoms), and if they can't then maybe they don't need/deserve to continue following their line of business."

- Richard S., Ontario

"My bad personal experience with Bell is hardly worth mentioning: you'll see thousands of similar complaints from Canadians. The real issue is our system that encourages national monopsony through acquisition, and actual monopoly in particular regions. That policy not only has us paying higher prices but makes Internet access and healthy diet unaffordable for low-income Canadians; it has also severely constrained access to trustworthy news and analysis which would inform us that the federal government can and must act to correct the abusive practices of too-powerful corporate lobbies. Surely now is the time to act for the public good and tell these corporations they do not have an unlimited licence to exploit Canadians to maximize profits."

- Judyth M., Quebec

Conclusion

Ordinary people in Canada care deeply about the outcomes of this consultation process. Despite a common belief that the Competition Act may be too “technical” to grab the attention of the average person, Canadians are well aware of the fact that this legislation has a direct impact on their daily lives — and are becoming more informed by the day. At present, more and more politicians are leveraging this understanding; they are amassing support by focusing the conversation on the lack of fairness in our economy, and rightly so. The longer these problems go unchecked, the more extreme the political solutions are going to be when they do come home to roost.

Swift and immediate action is not only in the best interest of the federal government, but a responsibility. In his 2021 mandate letter, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau instructed the Minister of Innovation, Science and Industry to: “...enhance consumer protection and ensure a level playing field for all businesses, undertake a broad review of the current legislative and structural elements that may restrict or hinder competition. This includes directly reviewing the mandate of the Commissioner of Competition, and in so doing, ensuring that Canadians are protected from anti-consumer practices in critical sectors, including in the oil and gas, telecommunications and financial services sectors.” ISED and Minister Champagne have an obligation to fulfil this mandate to the ends described: protecting people in Canada from the anti-consumer and anti-competitive practices of giants in some of our most concentrated — and critical — sectors.<sup>47</sup>

In undertaking this consultation on the future of competition policy, ISED has opened up a highly welcome dialogue with people in Canada. A dialogue, however, cannot be one-sided. By asking ordinary individuals to share their views on their experiences with monopolies and necessary changes they want made to the Competition Act, your department bears a clear responsibility to share back what you heard, what recommendations were made, and importantly — what our government plans to do with this information. Specifically, OpenMedia and Ekō urge ISED to release a report summarizing what you heard from this consultation, to be shared alongside the original consultation submissions and a timeline for legislative change the government plans to table.

People in Canada cannot wait any longer for action. Our cost of living crisis will not fix itself; without government action to challenge, break up, and prevent monopolies, millions of people will continue to struggle to meet their fundamentally basic needs while giants like Rogers, Bell, and Loblaws enrich themselves and their shareholders. The path to lowering our intolerably-high telecom prices and grocery bills is to make Canada inhospitable to anti-competitive behaviour — and it begins with our government immediately tabling pro-consumer legislative changes to competition policy.

Nadine	P	ON	Government is the biggest monopoly
Ricardo	V	QC	Monopolies turn societies arteriosclerotic, as competition clots.
Pedro	P	ON	Monopolies erase opportunities, and deprive people's choices while maintaining poorly paid employees
Lisa	A	ON	I hate monopolies because they make our lives miserable. People in Canada already can barely afford the basic necessities and when you take away our choices by letting these monopolies happen you're going to make it impossible for us to have internet or cell phones anymore. We need you to look out for us not the big guys for once.
Francois	G	QC	Price gouging is theft.
			What I dislike about monopolies is the sheer opposition of real competition.
			They oppose it to the extend of threatening regional carriers from loss of business (using fake accounts on social media to complain about bad/poor/lack of service) or by hostile take-overs in order to wipe out real competition.
			They want to rule the entire spear of wireless, wireline and everything else.
			They want prices to stay high, along with frequent price increases, price gouging, etc. This isn't right. This is unacceptable.
			How have I been harmed? As a former telus customer of five years, I had my plan of $69/month raise to $190 in just two years, then after changing to a lower one of $74 (because higher costs), it again, raised to $195 in three years.
			That's when I had enough and ported out to then WIND mobile (who later got bought by Shaw). My plan's price never once increased, service was great (has massively improved in the 12 years I have been a customer) and any technical problems got resolved within a week (the usual amount of time expected).
			That was just the cellular part. Here's the wireline (internet/tv/homephone) part.
			Being a rogers customer, price increases of $5 to $10 happen every single year. Same for bell. A bundle costed less until the promotion ended, and had to switch telecom providers once the bill got to $300. Then $574 once the promotions ended with bell, and switched again back and forth.
Brian	C	ON	This needs to stop.
Daniel	F	ON	Life is becoming unaffordable.
Naomi	K	AB	This should a country of fairness, this is not the case. The governments job is to keep all Canadian s able to live in this country. Monopolies have kept their very powerful thumbs on the people and the government gives them freedom to do this. They are offering tax breaks and laws to help. Where did we get so backwards. The people should be first not wealthy ceos.
Laura	S	ON	Monopolizing people to struggle to make ends meet because of the greed of more money over people's well being. Greed to sit in board meetings creating ways to put the people who are pinching pennies just to put food on the table, make keeping a very expensive way to stay in touch take advantage of everyone in the family by having to pay a fee and keeping entertainment costs affordable only for the people who are financially well off. All of the above affects me. As a senior with the only money coming in is barely enough just to get essentials, never mind being able to ever see live theatre or concerts anymore.
Lloyd	S	ON	I wanted to reduce some of the services that I was paying for at Rogers such as my Home Phone. However, due to the package I was on they stated that my Bill was going to go up. I wanted to make the change 1 month before my Contract Changed. It isn't fair that reducing Services causes a price increase.
Charles	M	QC	Companies like Bell, Rogers and Ticketmaster all have been treating customers like we have no say in how we like to treated in regards to prices that are imposed on us. Many times have been overpaid or not even paid back for services promised to received but have not! When a monopoly like Bell decides to fund network "improvements" by repeatedly screwing its customers by increasing service fees with no appreciable improvement in service, it begs a single question: what are they doing with their profits?! Of course, we all know the answer to this fundamental question: engorged bonuses and shareholder returns. While seemingly "caring" for shareholders may seem reasonable, it should never come at the expense of their captive client base! How about having them try a novel approach and generating additional profits by finding efficiencies in their business model and giving their abused customers — from which their fast profits are perpetually generated — a long-overdue break!
Dino	V	ON	People of Alberta should understand why we pay so much for cell phone packages Rogers is part of the Rogers place so THEY ARE GIVEN OK TO HAVE HIGH PRICES ON PHONE PACKAGES AND DONATE OR OWN PARTS OF BUILDINGS AND PAY WITH OUR MONEY WE PAY THEM !!!!! That is why our cell phones are high
Jeff	B	AB	Same as lab laws they are showing big profits but yet our tax money went to pay for new refrigeration for them they had the money to do it for themselves. Why do we as taxpayers and pay for it and they make big profits brag about how big a profit they have this what's wrong with our government do you not think the government doesn't get money from them for elections there's always a payback
sandi	s	BC	Monopolies take away my voice and my right to have a choice between competing products and services. Telus and Shaw are companies that have repeatedly not lived up to their contract with me. They have repeatedly not provided the service I have paid them for and have never been accountable for it. They also will not let me out of the contracts I have signed with them, even though they have not lived up to their obligation in the contract. Complaints go nowhere, they continue to charge me full price, and when I break the contract they have the right to penalize me.
Anna	P	ON	Canadians pay the highest cell phone bills in the world!! Telus recently advised me that my cell phone bill will increase by 10%. Just like that. My income did not go up by 10%. What is the point of overseers like the CRTC if they do not advocate for Canadians rights and rather allow monopolies to continue? Monopolies hurt Canadians and profit only the companies allowed to gouge us without mercy.
Lucky	K	ON	Open the market for more competition, more the competition more the prices will come down and competitors will fight in between them for market share which will be good for consumers
			Oligopolies and Monopolies are terrible for citizens of Canada, or any country. Oligopolies collude, price fix and basically act as monopolies. Collusion is illegal, but very seldom, if ever enforced. It is the duty of the Government to enforce this, yet they do not. In addition to price fixing and gouging, the quality of goods and services is diminished over time since there is no viable competition. In the case of telecoms, it is my opinion that it is essential for the infrastructure be nationalized. These services have become as essential as electricity, water, food etc. and it is the only way to ensure a free market approach where the public own the infrastructure to allow fair competition. It is unbelievable how much we pay for our telecom services, especially when you compare them to other comparable large, sparsely populated countries such as Australia, where they pay about half of what we do for compatible offerings. In addition, it is becoming more and more a matter of national defence since cyber attacks can disrupt entire countries and have the potential to destroy just about every aspect of our society which depends on it. As far as the food/grocery industry, oligopolies and monopolies weaken the food supply significantly by relying on big food/agro monopolies for their products, making it a very fragile, vulnerable system that essentially funds unsustainable food production to cut costs and increase yield. Ticketmaster constantly price gouges with their service fees and control of the primary and secondary event ticket market. They also gather and sell information that you are mandated to allow them access to in order for you to attend an event. In addition, it is appalling, and should be illegal to have to have a mobile phone in order to attend an event in Canada. This is a form of classism that should be made illegal.
Darin	H	ON	I'm a pensioner. Monopolies cost me more for necessary products. It's stressful and unfair.
Donald	K	ON	The government needs to do more. They must break up current monopolies and prevent future ones from occurring, ensuring a healthy economy that can be beneficial to all.
Patrick	G	QC	Longtime customer of EBOX in Montreal, I switched to them after years of paying too much to Videotron and Bell. So of course after the disastrous 2019 infrastructure access decision-over-beers, my rates go up. But I like the company and the service, so I stay. But then Bell buys them out. Surprise surprise, all of a sudden EBOX calls me up and says that now they have access to Bell's fiberoptic network and would I like them to install it? Imagine if they had had access to fiber five years ago!
Tim	N	ON	Why is it that monopolies can keep gaining steam but you don't allow new competition so the consumer has a choice for services. Competition is healthy for everyone involved.
Kim	M	BC	The monopolies that suck most are government owned ones, like BC Hydro and BC Ferries. In some cases monopolies are about the only feasible way of doing things. Can you imagine 20 different telephone lines? How about 50 railways?
Michael	B	AB	That being said, there does have to be some control over prices inflicted on a captive market.
			I can barely afford my phone bill between my wife and I. I'm constantly having to shop around for deals and swapping providers when the service is terrible, the price is increased, or phantom charges constantly show up. Every time I see a 'new' company show up I take the time to research them and find they're owned by the same three companies Rogers, Telus or Bell. And every time my service has gotten worst, more expensive, or both!

Karen	B	ON	The government needs to stop catering to the interests of large corporations over those of its citizens. Big business exists only to make money for its shareholders and grow its business until it has a major part of the market. The interests of big business and ordinary citizens are miles apart. We all have read about the obscene amount of money these corporations and their high level managers make and the huge gap with their employees. Sponsoring some sports teams or funding a new wing of a hospital hardly makes them of benefit to the community when they could be paying their employees much more. How can any smaller business compete with these giants. If they do gain a toehold they are bought out. You know that their huge team of tax lawyers and accountants make sure they are taking advantage of every loophole and not paying their fair share of taxes.
Ron	B	AB	I really do not see how big corporations benefit the community. We need choice, competition and the ability to support start-ups and small businesses.
Lynn	T	BC	It is far past time for our government to start governing for the people instead of for corporate profits. As a low-income senior I am stretched to the limit with my grocery and internet bills. There is no excuse for these corporations to be making record profits at our expense. Government has the power to intervene.
Neil	B	ON	"Every billionaire is a policy failure." Loblaw criminal food gougers and their insidious campaign to piece meal their way into profiting off of Medicare through their pharmaceutical monopoly incursions are a devastating to our wellbeing. Destroy the "market balancing act" that you always quote while your anti-market monopolies fix prices with their extensive holdings against those 'not big enough to not fail', will just further their consolidations and market share. The monopolies are strangling our economy because of anti monopoly controls that are loosely controlled or with political indifference or open support from their state allies. Break up the monopolies and encourage democratic participation. PS Canada's internet rentier costs are some of the worst in the world. Community control of the internet's democratic square. First of all I don't believe people understand how these companies use your information. How much money is invested in research to manipulate the population as a whole.
Thomas Gregory	P	NB	Ok so think for a minute. When out and about with cellphone in hand your phone automatically updates each and every actions you make, such as purchases on your route. If you used your visa or debit card you leave a trace that holds your data for that day. Through Google maps, your banking information provided along with business sharing data will hijack this data to track you and sell this information to advertisers, companies online that may or may not have your best interest in mind.  What if everything you buy is storing data in and around you every day. Your computer, cellphone, Android tv, Google nest aware, video surveillance devices. Even tho they are made for your security that may not actually be the case. This is because your data is being collected by these companies who make these devices and is being shared "unanimously" so they say for study purposes. Through universities, who in turn provide this information to statistics Canada for their own government funded operations. The government itself has a loophole through educational studies which I would guess also fund a lot of these schools. Why is that. For surveillance of course. Using excuses like safety, crime, fraudulent activity, each and every day your information is at risk.  Over the past 5 years the government has created new safety standards in the vehicle industry. This is a good example because the excuse is safety and protecting you from another motorist by having these vehicles equipped to monitor your every move. Automatically giving access to the RCMP whenever and however. Now the worst part is the information and how they receive it. So they are creating these safety in vehicle laws in order to place technology in your vehicle that will make it easier to access everything you do, and especially your Bluetooth devices, speakers, at any time you can be recorded especially if you have priors for say alcohol or drug abuse, driving record. Drug possession charges. This now allows them the right to monitor you. Listen to you.  With this technology especially with it being able to be accessed can always be hacked and no online information is ever 100% secure. The world is in competition for data. Data is big business. These actions by the government is basically handing over your information on a platter to any and every company who has the ability to buy and sell it. The government is a business and people don't seem to understand that privacy is more important now than ever. We should be holding our government accountable. COVID allowed each and every personal cellphone to keep track of each and every other device whether it's yours or not. Originally created to warn you if someone nearby has COVID and to steer clear. Think about what other uses this technology can be used for. Obviously tracking for one. Private security, especially. Every Walmart and insurance company is constantly using these technologies to make decisions that eventually allows them to strategize each and every local area within 100miles to new ways to pick your pocket I'm sure or worse.  Rogers, Bell and so on honestly have the world in their hand and the government should not be taking advantage of how useful this is to them and doing more business with them because of it. Take a look at government contracts over the past few years and see how much money has been spent on huge telecommunications company contracts. I don't believe the government wants to fix this because they to own internet companies and want the same things and scratch each others backs when they need a major data leak coordinated to help in one of their investigations and blamed on some shell company created by them.
susan	h	BC	Good luck Bell has hit me with fines without telling me in the middle of the remote BC and no way to call because they "blocked" me for non payment even though I paid...later I found out from Bell chat line that have been overcharging me for years for a phone bought in 2018! I am almost deaf and this is the only phone I can use.
KHanh	B	QC	They do not allow monopoly in USA but why do we continue using monopolies? Greed greed greed
Alan	S	MB	Il nous coûtent trop cher. I have been a Manitoba Telecom Services customer since I believe 1975. As I moved into the 21st-century and I ditched my landline, I maintained my Manitoba Telecom Services and then later MTS/Bell services up until 2022. During that time with a contract that I had signed, but not renewed, because I was satisfied with the provisions of the contract, once the contract had expired, Bell/MTS continually raised my rates, even though I had not agreed to those rate raises because they were above and beyond the original contract prices. The CRTC appeared to do nothing in regards to big telecom, preying upon customers who refused to update their contracts, which always would mean there would be a price increase, as no new contract ever would see a price drop for the same services rendered. Things came to a head, with the dismissal of Lisa LaFlamme from the Bell Media Network. I have since shredded all of my affiliation with Bell/MTS, and went with other providers for my wireless service and for my Internet. I will never ever do business with Bell/MTS again. During my dissolution from Bell/MTS, it was fraught with an incredible confusion as to how to disentangle myself from them. They made it extremely difficult to port my Bell/MTS wireless number over to Telus, and even when speaking with service representatives from Bell/MTS, they were not aware of all of the requirements related for a number to be freely ported. My view is that Bell/MTS, really now Bell alone, is a pariah in the wireless world, and a predator to customers. When will the CTRC and the Government of Canada wake up and start acting on behalf of customers, rather than having their pockets lined by big media, as appears to be the case.
Debbie	A	ON	I thought that the Canadian government had laws preventing monopolies. However, everywhere I look I see monopolies starting, big companies being given permission to buy up other companies. Where I live I don't have a choice of cable companies, the city is divided up and each company gets a chunk and frankly I can't afford their prices, so I do without. I consider that a monopoly. I want a chance to choose like it once was. The prices these companies charge is outrageous and unfair. We need better more diverse system with more competition for our business to try to keep businesses honest.
Michael	B	AB	The only way to reduce the monopolies is to increase the number of providers. The government allowing the sell of Shaw to Rogers takes away competition which increases the monopolies, reduces choices and increases the cost to individual Canadians. If the politicians and bureaucrats in the Federal government are concerned with the economic impact to ordinary citizens they need to work to increase the opportunities in the marketplace not reduce them.
Sean	G	ON	U have already taxed so much we can hardly afford to live. Cause of your dam taxes.. u have and are crushing our economy .. what your doing to Canada is insane in now cost so much just to live here.. this is madness. I'm on ODsp and my rent is higher then my check.. how are suppose to eat.. and yet u wanna let these big companies Jack our prices even higher.. simply put what you're doing to this country is ludicrous soon people will be on the street and left homeless and not be able to eat or feed their children all because you want to fill your pockets with the money that we barely have you need to grow up you need to stop stealing our money you need to realize that inflation that you're creating. Will soon cause Mass trauma all around and if you don't do something to stop it soon it will be too late I fear for that day to come as I know it's approaching how much longer can a country sustain itself when the person's persons running the country are degrading it and allowing inflation to skyrocket as well as rent the cost of food that you know I can take an all-inclusive vacation outside of Canada for 2 months and live so much cheaper than what I can living here isn't that disgusting a vacation outside of Canada and I can live cheaper than I can hear you need to do something for the good instead of bringing us down because that really is all you're doing to all of us as a whole that's my rant not that it will do any good because you guys are self-righteous jerks who don't care about anybody but yourselves and how much money you can take from everyone else to feel your own pockets anyways I'm done. thanks for reading

David	B	QC	Enough is Enough! We are suffering the worst prices among the civilized nations of the world, measure need to be taken to stop this corporate greed!
SERHIY	R	BC	Constant price hikes, hidden charges.
b	W	ON	I'm sick of a lack of competition creating the scenario where I have to pay higher for goods and services and often with diminished quality or offerings. For example, my phone bill being extremely high, grocery bills continually going up, and even being charged an additional fee for purchasing my movie tickets online.
Murray	R	ON	We pay them to own us. That's ridiculous. We are supposed to be their clients, not asset property. I grew up in POVERTY! It has taken me 70 years to get to a position where I am financially simply modestly comfortable and not worrying if I will have enough money to pay my bills. Now, since the pandemic, I see all of our major Canadian corporations trying to take advantage of that crises to gouge me! NOW, I am worrying if I will have enough money to live out my final years! This is plain and simple NOT RIGHT, in fact it is DESPICABLE to use a major health crises to get richer! If this is allowed by our government to continue then I really fear for the future state of our country. I hope that I will die before Canada becomes a effing jungle like some 3rd world country. COME ON CANADA; act like you have a spine and protect your people, not shareholders and CEOs!
Catherine	W	QC	You're allowing companies like loblaws gouge us at the grocery stores even after they were caught price fixing bread, you allow American companies to take over Canadian companies only to shut their doors. It's time you start standing up for Canadians not these gouging corporations
Jeff	B	SK	Monopolies control prices ( price fixing ), Gobble up competition, act like a dictatorship, do not give a dam about anything other than the bottom line on the balance sheet, they have the $$$ to pay Lobbyists to badger and gain access to our elected officials and other policy makers to entice them to there way of thinking and voting for what want that the ordinary public do not have this is not a fair process.
William	H	ON	Monopolios use their power to ruthlessly gouge working people. They are accountable only to their profit gorging owners.
Dan	B	BC	The many monopolies in Canada fell so immune to anything that the Canadian government will do to them that they have let their GREED get out of control. They prey upon Canadian citizens and the the current Liberals seem to applaud them. Is this corruption?  Best example is the Liberal government promising lower internet rates through competition. We actually got it for a short period. Then the CRTC head - a former big TEL lobbyist - reversed it and the liberals did nothing.  Rather care about Canadian citizens they sided with big monopoly business! Either it was corruption or at the very least they were worried about continuing to get political contributions from these monopolies.
Bruce	G	ON	I for one have decided that I can no longer support the Liberal party at any government level until this is reversed retroactive to the original date many years ago. The decrease in competition in every facet of our economy from farming to media to food sales and energy has come to fruition with the cooperation of our supposed elected representatives. The public is slowly becoming aware of our fake democracy . When government colludes with the wealthy and powerful at the expense of the public as they are now and it is so obvious. The public is awakening and will no longer tolerate this kind of corruption any more.
Robert	C	BC	Tired of all the price gouging
Dustin	S	AB	Monopolies are like drug cartels. They are there to protect the self interest of themself with the blessing of the government. We as people vote and elect the government to serve and protect us but they protect the big cooperation so as to protect their shares in the companies and the dividend given to them. In my opinion there want be a change and the government will not allow competition conducive to the new players to enter into the field.
Gerard	T	ON	We ordinary people are constantly being taken advantage of and intimidated by monopolies. Elected gov't should has the obligation to protect all taxpayers in this utmost issue.
Tony	C	ON	I am on a fixed income. My income does not keep up with the inflated grocery prices and exponential price increases in every other aspect of my daily life.
Fran	L	AB	While the "fat cats" keep getting fatter I have to do with less and less
			It's because they can do things unilateral or in collusion. Every Big Telco has the same rates, same deals, same offerings and deal with complaints equally. Bad service? Try going to a competitor and they are doing the same thing. Customer support gives out olive branches and a few months later, you are back to square one as the offer is rescinded.  Has there been any major tech changes? Yet rates keep going up to support new technologies. By all the players. Don't they have innovations of their own over their competitors to one-up their competitors? They don't care as they know customers don't have too many options to go elsewhere. A new popup company shows up and offers better rates. A new months later they are absorbed by the big players.  Without competition, there is no innovation and no supply-demand check and balance. Just control and power held by the few.
John	T	NS	The gov't facilitates their actions as the big players contribute immensely to the gov't pockets as proof of the good intentions of these oligarchs and the gov't buries this under doing things for the public good.
Esteban	S	QC	Mexicans can pay less than Canadians do for cell service. We are an embarrassment-- caused by big telecoms monopolies and abuse, and our government does nothing about it.
Christopher	G	ON	Lack of competition among the big telecommunications monopolies leads to poor service and major errors, like the Rogers outage in Summer 2022, which would/could not exist in a more diverse market, where competition would necessitate better, more stable service in order to stay in business. Lack of competition also allows big grocers to fix prices and use inflation as a cover for egregious and unnecessary price mark-up with no repercussions as most Canadians do not have other grocery options, widening well-documented wealth disparity and hurting the marginalized as well the economy overall. All of these monopolies should be broken up and/or competitors from other jurisdictions should be fostered into the market.
Wayne	C	BC	Prior to the 1970s, it was possible in Canada for a family to own its home with the income of a single wage earner, meaning that the children were raised in relative security by at least one of their parents. But now, I am confronted every day by hardships experienced by myself and other members of a dysfunctional society because it's had the rug pulled out from under it by a small number of very greedy individuals who continue to plunder the commons and enrich themselves at everyone else's expense. Monopolies are only one of their tactics to steal everything that isn't nailed down. Worse yet, they haven't the slightest bit of class or even housebreaking, because they have left such a mess that the futures even of their own grandchildren are at extreme risk. The bills are long past due - break up these monopolies, tax these greedy psychopaths (nobody needs more than a million dollars and even that amount is far beyond the expectations or even appetites of most of the world's population), and use the money to restore balance to our environment and society. Monopolies , zero competition !
Robert	P	QC	We pay the highest cell and Internet prices in the world because of monopolies! Allow other providers from the U.S. to compete against the big three , and that goes for dairy products also. Seriously? You need yet ANOTHER one of the tens of millions of people screwed by price gouging, blatant price fixing that YOU GUYS won't deal with, companies taking over other smaller companies with ALWAYS results in lower quality and higher costs? YOU REALLY NEED people to clue you the hell in why monopolies are bad?
Leslea	H	AB	Grow the hell up. STOP ALLOWING MONOPOLIES! If this Liberal government and its decision makers were serious about governing for working class people, the people who voted for them, they would STOP this monopoly takeover in every sector of the economy, especially Big Telecom, Big Tech, Big Grocery....the list goes on...and work on improving customer choice resulting in lower affordable prices! There used to be laws in Canada against monopoly takeovers!
Caroline	M	AB	Enough of this unregulated corporate GREED!
J.	C	BC	When rogers went down last year, it was an emergency everywhere. No one from rogers faces prison time for bad system design and cutting corners. It monopolies shuld have been broken up by noontime that day. Monopolies mean high prices and gouging. As I am financially challenged, I cannot afford high prices and gouging. When I first got a cellular telephone years ago, I was with Bell. Bell was literally charging me incorrectly for things month after month and, month after month, I would have to go to Bell to get my bills corrected. I left Bell and went to Solo. Solo was much better by far! Then, Solo was bought out by Bell. Unsurprisingly, it was not very many months before Solo became bad like Bell. Unsurprisingly, I left Bell/Solo. I am currently with Telus. Telus is at least better than Bell. Never, ever would I return to Bell.

Meagan	C	ON	The Canadian monopolies have irreparably damaged the future and present for generations of current and future Canadians. Loblaw's receives a slap on the wrist for fixing bread prices for 16 years. As a young worker this treatment proved that only the wealthy are forgiven and that working people bare the brunt of punishment for the rich's bad behavior. It is clear that 'fair' competition does not exist, that earning by merit was always a lie. I actively promote nationalizing these companies because even if you break them apart to begin the cycle of competition over again--the results will be the same. Eliminating the head of one dragon makes room for another. And doing the same thing over and over again expecting different results, is illogical and it's insanity. The people of this country already show their lack of faith in governments by low voter turnout, because it is clear that the three major parties are steered by the rich. Reforming the system is not working. Endless so called improvements to capitalism are also not working. Do better. Be revolutionary. Claim these industries for the people that actually make them work. Nationalize them for the people!
C	d	NS	Monopolies are essentially free to exploit workers and customers. That is, they're way too powerful. Consumers have no real influence of them, suggesting that they undermine an important principle of democracies.
Bruce	N	ON	Monopolies in Canada have been running the show for too long. Giants like Bell, Rogers, Loblaw's, and Ticketmaster are getting away with jacking up prices, limiting our options, and keeping our economy under their thumbs. From our sky-high cell phone and Internet prices, to wildly expensive grocery bills — it feels like our economy is failing us. By improving competition in Canada, our government can ensure that we have more choice, forcing companies to actually COMPETE for our business and lower their prices.
Nora	K	ON	0 zero 0 competition! Price gouging because they can. Where is our completion control, government?
Cathy	V	ON	We all know that monopolies are bad for the consumers. We are the ones paying for corporate greed. The less competition, the higher the prices can go and there isn't much we can do about it. Look at AT&T..."AT&T dominated the telephone market for most of the 20th century. The company was so big, it was forced to break up into eight smaller companies in 1984. Today, almost all of those companies are once again part of AT&T, along with cellular carriers and cable providers. The company grew so big that the government broke it up — only to see it become even bigger." So what's the use? There was an article on Marketplace about cell phone services & Canadians pay some of the highest rates in the world. It has nothing to do with the size of the country: Australia has much cheaper rates with the population spread out over more area. There ought to be a law.....
Robert	W	ON	Other countries in this world have more affordable choices than Canada. Big Telco have had their run for far too long. I always heard competition was good for consumers. There are too many players out there buying up the little guys. Whether it is telephone , airlines, pharmaceutical or ticket sellers, lets keep it fair for consumers. Right now it is not. We can fix it.
Kim Patrick	O	BC	Monopolies are in the business of DESTROYING small businesses, which in turn destroys families. It is that simple.
Manon	T	BC	I feel the mobile plans are way too expensive for the data we get and that there isn't enough choices of providers out there. I've also been very blessed to live close or in Chinatown these past few years which allowed me to buy most of my food from little, local and affordable asian markets; I feel sorry for those who don't have other choices than to shop at big supermarkets for their grocery.
Barbara	B	BC	It is never good to have a monopoly as we have in the grocery providers. Having the big corporations in charge of the our telecommunications is a recipe for price fixing. Please try and break up the monopolies as they have done in the US when there were monopolies there.
Stewart	W	BC	Monopolies stifle competition. Their sole purpose is to benefit billionaires and profits for stockholders to the detriment of their employees and consumers.
Lindsay	D	BC	Monopolies only benefit the greedy CEOs of corporate behemoths. They stifle innovation as companies have no reason to do better or improve their services or products.
Donald	S	QC	Monopolies hurt everyone!
Nathalie	V	QC	Stop the monopolies!
Karl	W	ON	Ticketmaster Stole my 4 tickets for the last Tragically Hip concert in Kingston. I had them in my basket and they froze my account and I couldn't get the system to proceed. They have always been greasy just like the do nothing Conservative premier, who again does nothing to stop this issue. People are being ripped off by Ticketmaster with help from Fords lack of concern for the people.
John	S	BC	As an average Canadian citizen I wish to advise our Canadian Government that as a result of a dysfunctional and toothless Competition Act, Canadians are being trampled on by these corporations that control most aspects of our daily lives. From groceries to vital telecommunications and unaffordable entertainment. These companies have a grip on critical aspects of our economy that are a major part of our lives. I have personally experienced a 50% increase in my bill for the exact same service I had with Telus for the past 2 years! Empire Foods that own Sobeys and Thrifty Foods have imposed steep price increases while smaller independent stores have not. TicketMaster is a master at gouging us for entertainment events to a point where the prices they charge with all the surcharges are considered pure robbery by average citizens! I have lost faith in our federal government and their ability to run our country in a fair and equitable manner so that average Canadians can enjoy life and not be burdened by the control these corporate thugs impose on Canadian society. Our Competition Act is a joke. There is no control toward fair competition. Perfect example, the Rogers take over of Shaw. In closing all I can say to our government and responsible departments is: "GET WITH IT AND CLEANUP YOUR MESS, MAKE A FAIR AND COMPETITIVE MARKET ENVIRONMENT IN CANADA"! Don't be a waste of skin, give us results not more of the same.
Preston	M	MB	I'm all for capitalism, but "late stage" capitalism is where it breaks down. As soon as a business is capable of leveraging scale and global resources; as soon as a business can compete unfairly (at a loss), indefinitely, until they either destroy or consume the competition, consumers will LOSE and lose big. We're being eaten alive by every sector. It must stop. Govt must support bringing jobs home; manufacturing and production needs to be in our back yard, not across the globe. Multi-national businesses need constraints, that permit smaller, local businesses opportunity.
Shawn	W	ON	We're all just tired of getting gouged by these companies who have no incentive to be competitive. We have the internet, guys, we can see how much less nearly every other country is paying. It's egregious but not surprising that no politicians will even touch this issue.
Teodoro	E	QC	I feel i am being Goughed on everything i am buying.Stop TAXING us to BANKRUPTCY. Rogers adds $50 fee after contract is confirmed.
Steve	G	AB	Superstore/Loblaw's CEO's reaping excessive profits/bonuses - money for the rich, while gouging the middle classes with overpriced groceries.
Morgan	D	NS	Monopolies inevitably lead to egregiously expensive prices that prevent many Canadians from accessing products and services they need. We are a single income family and the way Bell, Rogers, Ticketmaster and others keep increasing their prices makes it hard to pay the bills and with little to no competition get away with increasing pricing all of the time unlike the US. We try to save money where we can and there is no reason why these companies should be continuously hiking their prices and in the end will be without alot of customers as most cannot afford their products!
Kerri	M	ON	I have never had cell phone service because several phone companies (Telus, Rogers) have ripped members of my family off in various ways over the years, and I can't afford the usual rates, or get a reduced rate because the poverty line is not poor enough to qualify.
Ken	S	AB	End capitalism. Its as easy as that. With no capitalism there would be no corporatism, therefore less greed, corruption, and monopolies!
Derek	T	ON	End capitalism now, and all these other neoliberal issues go away with it!
John	R	ON	Monopolies are bad because they overcharge for services because they can! Rogers overcharged me for overage on downloads!
Nadir	R	ON	As a government that restricts big companies like Airbnb and Uber to give "fair competition", I simply cannot understand why it is silent on big monopolies like Bell, Rogers, Loblaw's, and Ticketmaster.  Apparently the government has the authority to put price restrictions on landlords regarding house rentals but not on big corporations.  It cannot be selective rules on certain groups while "free trade" for others. Equality applies to all.

			Prices for everything are always increasing, we have very few choices when shopping around for pricing. Often times the prices are the same or similar everywhere.
			In the past year I have had to cancel my mobile service, something critical in today's society.
Lawrence	G	QC	I have also reduced my food consumption from 3 to 1 meal per day and this is starting to affect my health but I have no choice, food is too expensive and the food banks that don't qualify you based on income are often too crowded or have nothing left.
			My monthly bill from Telus has been creeping up over the years, without ever a single explanation.
Ursula	L	BC	It is their right? I cancelled services one by one. Now I have access to the internet and once house phone for $118 per month.
			I'm not sure this is related, but for me the price for things like internet just seems to be rising. There are no added services, just a price hike. It makes no sense. Yes, these companies have free reign.
Lee	E	NL	My internet is not from any of these larger players. I use Eastlink. But my prices continue to rise and I think it's because the larger companies have provided the rules of the game - rising price for less. So, they all obediently and greedily play.
			Over the past five years, my grocery bill has gone up by over $300, we went from $200 a month for groceries to $600 a month. The price of groceries is killing us. We may not be able to keep up with this level of price gouging much longer. As far as telecommunications are concerned between the lack of choice of Internet, service provider and cell phone service coupled with unbelievably expensive pricing at least a third of my paycheck. Every month goes to telecommunications. My wife and I are cell phone bill is $170 a month, our Internet bill through Start communications, which, by the way was just bought out by Telus is currently $79 a month. If we have to pay any higher than this, I have no more Internet and I can no longer afford to pay for a cell phone. Like groceries these prices are killing us. It's high time that both industries took a hard look in the mirror about what they're doing to the people of this country. We need lower prices and more choices in both industries. The behaviour in particular of the telecommunications companies is borderlining on a criminal offense if these companies are unwilling to price their stuff in accordance with what the European Union and the British Commonwealth are doing it's time for all three companies to be put out of business. And the grocery store chains that's an easy one, I'm shocked that the chief executive officers of all three companies haven't been bashed over the back of the head with a brick. If you want people to be comfortable, you Gotta make prices a little easier to swallow, this type of belligerent and arrogant behaviour is going to destroy the working poor and the middle class quite simply. And if the price of food doesn't come down, probably within the next two years, we could have massive food riot on our hands in every major city in Canada we need to fix this now.

			Monopolies are not good for the general public. Lack of competition stifles innovation & creativity, actually slows development of new technologies, reduces customer service while at same time increases prices.
			I am a senior looking to retire in the next couple of years & lack of competition may force me to push out my retirement. Higher prices coupled with inflation have a detrimental affect on my standard of living.
			I have worked hard & saved money all my life and to allow monopolies to become ever more profitable at the expense of the working class average Joe is inexcusable.
			The government needs to reduce regulatory red tape & level the playing field to allow more competition with all the adherent benefits that come with that. Competition is good for society.

			The highest cellular and internet rates in the western world, sky rocketing profits for grocers, rigged ticket sales to force aftermarket price gouging and the freedom of corporations to collect whatever personal data they want without even asking for permission.
David	G	ON	It's abundantly clear who the governments of Canada believe they need to support with legislation. Is there any party in the government of Canada who supports the people? With the lack of action in most cases or the direct action against the rights of Canadians in others we are charging head long into confrontation.
Marlon	N	QC	Monopolies harm us. I have had to deal with horrible customer service time and again because many industries have few companies in them. They are not incentivized to value the customer and provide top-tier service because they know there are no other options open to the consumer.
			They grow big by destroying or absorbing our alternate choices so we are left with few options and become wholly dependent on them as they suck us dry. They become corporate vampires and unless they are brought under control, we become their feeding ground with no escape.
Cindy	M	BC
			I have what you need, I'm the only supplier so my price is $$$$$. That's not free market that's a captured market. Between food, gas, internet, phone. Company's are raping the people of Canada. All those things are essential for life today. Even though through hard times they all are showing unheard of profits. As the population heads to the streets.
			Last time this happened it was the dirty thirties. Guess we need another war to get on track.
			And you Government wonder why thousands are living on the streets. Need 100k a year to rent now, but 40k is the average income in Canada.
John	C	QC	Get your act together or get out of the business telling us what to do and how to do it.
Ken	A	AB	If you believe Telus isn't in command of everything just try contacting them. You can't get help or talk to a human being. It's impossible.
			I'm in a small town in the GTA. It's 2023. Despite that, my internet is a crappy DSL service. I use a smaller ISP (Teksavvy) because I believe in fostering healthy competition, because it believes in user rights and shares many of my principles, and because its customer service is VASTLY superior to the big players in my area. Here's the fun part: Bell strung brand spanking new fiber OVER MY BACKYARD a couple of years ago that I can't get on because Bell isn't required to wholesale to smaller ISPs like the one I use. Talk about monopoly encouraged by government! Considering the horrible experiences and customer service I've gotten with Bell over the years, and their pathologically anticompetitive behavior, I will NEVER use them again, so I have to chug along at 10M/1M until someone in my government steps up and starts breaking the backs of these monopolies. Shame, Canada!
Christian	S	ON	It's impossible to trust the "free market" in this country, when the biggest players collude to artificially inflate / fix prices, and limit or eliminate any true competition.
			It keeps disposable income perpetually flowing upwards, effectively killing any opportunity for upward mobility.
			It needs to stop.
			However they've already gotten so big that only government is in a position to take them on...
			But that fails too with the corporate money spent to lobby and influence our elected representatives.
			This is what happens when the power balance btw capital and citizens gets upended and thrown out of whack.
Dwayne	N	AB
			Monopolies are anti-competition. The new term for price increases is greedflation. Why does Canada always support the big companies and not its citizens? It is time for our government to support its people first. As a retired citizen, it is getting harder to pay the bills. Enough is enough!
Richard	P	ON	Having had the high costs from BELL telephone, I decided to switch to a small provider - ZOOMER WIRELESS, through CARP, an organization that services SENIORS, of which I am one. My phone bills are now stabilized at $42 per month, with NO long-distance charges in Canada. Unfortunately, I have satellite TV from BELL, and there is no alternate supplier other than one of the big 3.
LOUIS	B	ON	CANADIANS need to support this effort to get rid of CONGLOMERATES!

Diana	v	BC	They harm consumers, and they discriminate against small businesses.
			We've been fortunate to find excellent resellers for the last few years when just high speed internet alone went over $100/m (& we don't have cable or a land line for more than a decade).
			We're excited about the possibility fibre being available to resellers for less as well.
Amanda	A	NS	Internet is no longer just a luxury. It's needed to succeed, to live today. People need access to it.
			TV and internet charges at their very basic levels cost hundreds of dollars. It's a rip off to people who work hard for money that goes only so far. Expensive groceries we can shop around for cheaper items. Same with cars and clothing. Internet is not a luxury yet even basic packages are insanely expensive. There is no shop around options. Wealth flows into the same pockets year after year. You would need to be more competitive with your products if other providers were available. Your fear of your inefficiencies becoming public is why competitors are not available. Canadians do not need to pay hundreds of dollars to simply use phones, watch television and have the internet. The arrogance of these large corporations needs to be dealt with. Up your game and compete. Earn the money you charge. How this industry can remain so small is proof of ignoring the very people you serve. How dictatorial. And indecent. I've no consumer loyalty to any of you. I use your services by force or none at all. Earn my loyalty as a consumer by increasing options and lowering prices. Greed doesn't look good on anyone. I sincerely hope Canada sees bills below a hundred dollars for bundled services in my lifetime. I've wasted enough on basic services long enough.

Nigel	P	BC	As a small business owner, I see time and time again governments bowing to large corporations. They the governments change or don't enforce laws to protect the consumer/small business owners. These large monopolies have far too much power over governments
Deane	S	BC	Stop white-collar, corporate espionage and colluding with politicians to weak public moral in Canada. How unfortunate it is to see this kind of malfeasance and blatant disrespect in individuals living in massive glass houses up in their dystopian world. Sad to see how people deviate to this reckless and self-centered behavior. Turbulence ahead for sure.... kicking, screaming, gucci little pigs!
Dwight	E	NB	Years ago companies like NBTEL convinced the government they had to grow larger to compete globally, yet 30 years later we have no foreign companies offering services in Canada. The Competition Bureau has failed Canadians so miserably there is no competition in any given industry in Canada. Marketing boards create the same non-competitive environment. All of which has dramatically increased cost to Canadians and limited products and services available to Canadians. All political parties are to blame. We desperately need competition and removal of price fixing marketing boards.
Emberlie	T	AB	Over beholden to share holders instead of doing what's right for society to function. Ex Corporations have bought our governments for over 70 years. Corporate lobbying should be declared a criminal activity. They should be forbidden from financing and/or participating to any political activity.  Any commercial and/or financial activity occurring on a territory should result in taxes being paid to the said territory without exception.  Corporations should not be allowed to export profits made on any given territory.
Yves	L	QC	Corporation should be allowed activity on a territory only if the balance between benefits versus prejudices favour citizens.
Beverly	P	BC	I realize that prices have gone up in general everywhere, but sometimes it is just ridiculous. Mine is in regard to Real Canadian Superstore and its "Independent" grocers that are supplied by RCS. Last summer, a bucket of a very popular cat litter was $15. This is a good brand we've been using for years. As of January the same sized container is now $38. There is no way the ingredients and/or container of that product has increased in price by that much; even transportation costs cannot possibly have gone up to such a degree. It is price gouging. As a retiree on a fixed income, this makes me furious.
Mark	H	ON	It is extremely depressing how regular Canadians are exploited by big business. A simple example is that we pay the most in the world for Cellular and internet services that are subpar when compared to other counties. Our infrastructure is lagging behind, despite the public funds used for Bell / Rogers infrastructure. All you need to do is compare Cell phone data rates from other counties vs Rogers or Bell and is obvious that Canadians are ripped off on a regular basis from our corporate overlords.
Adrian	M	ON	Where do I even begin, from price gouging on bread (where we got back 25 bucks after years of overpaying), to several hundred dollar lawn tickets at concerts due to dynamic pricing, to arguing with Rogers every year to get another discount for my ridiculously priced internet which I don't even get the speed advertised.....why? What is the government doing to support us? If they are working on this, what aren't they making the public more aware? This is just the small stuff, where is the support on housing, healthcare, support for education etc? These issues affect us all with monopolies in literally every facet of Canadian life. Please help us
Lisa	M	AB	Monopolies make everything more expensive, we can't afford to get a cell phone for everyone in the family. I don't have one. Entertainment forget it can't afford to go out.
RICHARD	R	BC	As a typical Canadian I am tired of paying high costs for telecom services.
Geoff	F	ON	It is disgusting how greedy this corporations are. Do all those at the helm know that when they die they will only the same size hole everyone else. 6 x6 x4? nothing more. They may not be aware that their wealth only prevents them from being more spiritual and moves them further from our Father.
DeeDee	A	ON	I'm a mother of two young children and we are trying to make ends meet. My husband and I have good jobs but we are being squeezed on every side. When monopolies in Ontario have been price gouging and posting record profits, while we, and other families and people in the community, are struggling, it feels like a monstrous injustice. The system is broken when regular people are struggling so much and these corporations are allowed to go on doing what they're doing.
Mike	S	QC	We have some of the highest prices in Canada vs. the rest of the world! This slows down our ability to share information, build a new economy and remain competitive with countries that offer higher bandwidth speeds at lower prices!  Tracking of phone calls and selling/giving that data to third parties is unacceptable. Apple and Google were recently sued over the past year and payed out hundreds of millions in dollars in fines to states in the USA, etc. This amounts to just a slap on the wrist for these large, big tech companies who make billions selling this data and using the data for advertising, sharing location databases with the DEA and other organizations without your consent, etc.
Tyler	N	BC	https://learn.abovephone.com/lesson/big-tech-is-bad/ This whole country is captured by monopoly interests. The government bends over backwards to satisfy their desires while ignoring their citizens - a la Bill C-11. These monopolies collude to maintain high prices and avoid competing with each other, whether it's gas, bread, or phone bills the situations is the same in every industry. It's been said that Canada is just, "Three monopolies in a trench-coat" and I don't disagree.
Corey	M	BC	Where we don't have monopoly, we have monopsony - choke points that allow companies like amazon to add fees and control who buys or even sees can be bought.  Things must change, but I don't see either a Liberal or a Conservative government ever standing up to their true Masters. Monopolies have been the norm in Canada for as long as I can remember. I was never able to understand why this would be allowed to happen when we have the Combines Investigation Act of 1923. Whether it be breweries price fixing or the likes of MacMillan Bloedel and Bell having virtual monopolies, it's been at obvious odds with the spirit of the act. I'm done with industry running our show. I'm fed up with lobbyists and marketing boards, maple syrup rotting in warehouses and milk being dumped down the drain. If we are going to live in a capitalistic society then there must be free and open markets and competition. Jacking up catfood over 103% is NOT inflation, it's greed! Selling poor quality meat not fit for human consumption at equal prices to meat aimed for people. Do they think we are stupid? Jacking up fuel over 1000% is NOT inflation, it's evil. Punishing people is not the way to switch to greener energy. Price gouging is rampant. Misleading food serving and nutrition information, decreasing food portions and selling rotten delivery food making customers feel they cannot return it is terrible, it is theft. Welcome to Canada: predatory utilities, rapacious rents and overpriced food with substandard oils like Crisco cottonseed that's DENIM JEAN OIL not fit for human consumption Rent café, Coinomatic (smelly moldy,. broken washers that repeatedly flood our entire laundry room, water over 2 feet high!!!!!! July 1st 2020 And stop transferring fees to customers, it is an abuse of the power of impersonal businesses. But the worst is giving up our cat because of ridiculous cat litter more than doubled! Paving over gardens of townhouses by insensitive landlords so we cannot grow food, how inhumane! And non-dairy milk not subsidized, and watered down, overpriced and out of stock! The gourmet barista Silk milk was worse! No spices, add extra ingredients at your own cost and WATERY! And Bell never gave back my deposit, refused to look up my file and took advantage of my severe depression, ripped this poor woman off 250$ in the 1990s. Bell can go to hell. Ticket master will never see any business from me, I choose to make my own music. Rogers, quit charging us ridiculous amounts. Canada invented the phone, why are we paying so much? No reason for Last Month Rent in Ontario, it's illegal in Québec. Deposit, credit card is enough to deal with issues. Clothing stores have to stop selling cheaply made disposable fashion. Top polluting industry is fashion. The harms are so long, I am writing a BOOK about all this.
Nikki	D	ON	This is my take on your attempt to build a two tiered health care system. I was a teen when we got Medicare. I remember very well how fearful my mother was any time one of us -- we were six children -- fell ill. We were low income while my father labored for Canada's safety in the Airforce. So now you decide to go totalitarian (the marriage of corporations with government) to thank Canadians for all we do for our country as hard working citizens who pay taxes, keep Canada's laws and try hard to keep our communities functioning.
Marie-France	G	BC	Who do you think you are, you mere members of parliament, to tell us we must now bow down to these imperial forces meant to keep us subservient to the corporate masters. You may think we will be so busy working wrecking our bodies and minds to stay afloat. Instead, we are becoming more aware and angry at this abuse of our governance and our lives. Stop it and go back to the small 's' social democracy we had, imperfect as it was. It's a sad day when even our 'leftwing' party is a corporate lackey!

			With telecomm we have some of the highest prices in the world. I have seen it first hand when travelling to other equivalent western nations.
Geoff	T	BC	Government policies that continue to allow our telecomm, grocery prices, and non-sense such as ticket master clearly aren't in the nest interest of citizens and show the government is not working in our best interest.

Alan	T	BC	Median fixed broadband speeds across Canada: British Columbia: 110.45 Mbps. Nova Scotia: 105.04 Mbps. Alberta: 91.81 Mbps. Ontario: 84.42 Mbps. In the US it's 195 Mbps at much lower cost to consumers. I struggle to get decent speeds across a 2 bedroom apartment in BC. Pretending this protects jobs is a joke. Canada's economy depends on healthy tech infrastructure, not fired tech monopolies.
Nick	M	ON	Loblaws with the price of bread is the best example of stealing money from us for so long and just paying back cents. Big telecommunications companies are doing the same for average people. I is the time that government step in and act for the people and not for big corporations.
Dorothee	M	AB	Originally coming from Europe I find the lack of affordable choices in Canada ridiculous. The food market gets tighter by the years, not to mention the phone/ internet market. We are earning a above average income but this year we started to have to watch what we are buying and when. Do something about it if you value your citizens!
Ana	B	ON	I am a health care worker, my salary raise is capped at 1%. Meanwhile, prices for food, housing and telecommunications, basic necessities, are increasing much more than 1%. This is not sustainable. If there are no changes to the competition laws, many Canadian families like mine will be deeply affected. I don't tolerate and can not afford lack of choice and monopolies. They are bullies and have criminal practices that will give them power above any institution. This is not just and democratic.
			Corporate consolidation into non-competitive monopolies has been a prominent and growing problem in Canada over the past decades, leading to Canadians paying some of the highest rates in the world for public goods like cell phone and internet connectivity. Not only that, but the "efficiencies" clause in Canadian Competition policy is tone-deaf and counter to the whole point of competition in the first place.

BALJIT	U	ON	SKY HIGH PRICES! THESE CROOKS/MAFIA MEN HAVE A SPECIAL PLACE IN HELL!!!
			The following changes need to be made:
			- Smaller ISPs need to be able to purchase bulk bandwidth at near cost rates from the larger ISPs. - Radio Frequency bandwidth should be available at public auctions that don't allow nor lock one cellular provider to a specific spectrum of frequencies. That way multiple carriers will be allowed to use the spectrum and compete within the same spectrum for airtime. - Cellular providers would pay on a monthly basis to rent the spectrum from the public.
			- Gov't would then re-invest that money into developing and providing free and open-source wireless tech (CRTC/NRC) to the general public; perhaps in the form of small, text-messaging antennas for public usage forming a mesh grid in cities.
			- Gov't opens various RF spectrums to open-source/free wireless usage. - That free/wireless tech would allow the general public to create their own local messaging apps and services which, over time, will compete with closed-source/bigtech monopolies.
			- Gov't would put those telecom revenues mentioned above into reducing exposure threshold limits for devices and antennas. In Austria, Russia and other countries, exposure limits are more than 1000x less than in Canada! https://bioinitiative.org/table-of-contents/
Mike	S	QC	Research Bio Biologie RF exposure limits. They suggest no more than 10 uWatts/M <sup>2</sup> of bedroom exposure for a safe and sound sleep. It goes without saying that monopolies in any sector have not been good for the people. Especially now, everywhere we turn, things are much more expensive. We have nothing left in our bank accounts. Why is the government stopping other companies from competing in their respective business. Why am I paying $12.00 fees for a $30.00 ticket to a concert ??? That's 40% for gods sake. Example of this is during the Junos in Edmonton in March 2023
			Why is my internet/cable TV so much more than the other developed countries. AT&T for example, would charge me $25.00/month, whereas Telus is charging me $90/month for the same services. Shaw/Rodgers is pretty much the same thing. SO, no competition, take it or leave it. Food-- Why is bread $4.00 a loaf at the big stores, but I can make my bread at home for 10 cents.
			Why is my cell phone $85.00 /month and yet AT&T is $20/month for the same .
			Only thing I can think of is the liberal government is receiving big donations from these big companies, Pharma included. This goes the same for our appliances, hot water tanks etc. which are being manufactured by fewer large corporations, which are bying up the competition, also. Why are we paying huge , for our meat products?? Because conglomerates like Carghill are allowed to buy out all the competition. Our kids can not afford to save for a house or car because of the gouging costs. The competition rules have been in place for years, but this government will not enforce it. I guess they enjoy the big donations from all of these big companies. Hopefully the people will speak up with their vote in the next election.

Stuart	R	ON	Monopoly is not democratic.
			Monopolies only hurt Canadians and the economy. Why should we be forced to rely on only one company that is only going to overcharge for their services and products during a time of massive greedflation. It is decisions like these that make me think about moving away from Canada for good. I will not take this sitting down and wait for another massive company that profits from exploiting hard working Canadians to fail and get bailed out because it's the only option. Stop bailing them out. Stop enabling them. Start nationalizing these services.
Sam	M	BC	I truly despise the high prices and poor service caused by the lack of competition in major industries such as telecom, grocery and banking within Canada! The government of Canada does not appear to be making any attempt whatsoever to break up these huge monopolistic giants that charge high prices to make record profits off the backs of Canadian citizens that have no choice but to use their services and buy their products. My monthly budget is super tight and my wife and I are barely squeaking by as a result of the price gouging by businesses such as Loblaws, Bell and Scotiabank to name just a few of these evil mega corporations. A reasonable profit is never enough for these companies. They always need more they will do what ever it takes to continue making record profits. We have three options to stop this attack on Canadian Citizens: 1. Break up these giant corporations and allow more competition to enter the market or 2. Nationalize these basic services that everyone relies on and 3. A combination of both methods. Unfortunately, politicians that work for the Government of Canada work for and are much more interested in serving the needs of Canada's corporate giants. Corporate welfare is very much alive and well in Canada.
Tyson	M	AB	Every Canadian is harmed every day by these monopolies, and both the Conservatives and the Liberals, are quite content to let things carry on, as both parties get LARGE donations from them.
Carl	T	MB	Break them up, and cancel ALL donations from corporations. Stop the Corporate Welfare State.
J E	S	ON	I would like to see more competitive companies be allowed into Canada. Why are Canadians having to pay such high prices for cell phones and internet. I want an affordable and accessible Internet and certainly cheaper cell phone services. We all need to have monopolies curtailed and not allowed to grow bigger!!!
			Why does our government encourage parasite middlemen/women to become even more powerful and obscenely wealthy by allowing gross price gouging? Lob-laws, Bell, Rogers, Telus, Nestle's, Ticketmaster, et al, have been free to exercise insatiable greed, resulting in an unnecessary and massive inflationary pressure on all levels of Canadian society, but particularly for lower income citizens. For the sake of our country and the world, please take action to control greed in corporate and financial practices.

Rick	S	ON	Monopolies are very unhealthy for our economy. They empower the large companies to charge consumers a price that is higher than comparable goods and services in an open market. They give these monopolies the ability to fix prices. The government allows the monopoly to disallow competitors to enter their place of business (Canada). The government has the ability to make deals with these companies in exchange for allowing them to operate as a monopoly. I am a disabled senior on a fixed income. (Pensions) I have a cell phone which I use only for emergencies and haven't use for over 6 months. It costs over 30 dollars per month. I am shut in so have internet so I can stream sn now and netflix at a cost of 83 dollars. Grocery prices have soared. Mr Weston refused to answer the questions that consumers had presented to Mr Singh (NDP) inparliament. Gas to heat my home has increased by over 200 percent since monopoly enbridge took over. We have spent billions over many decades in bailing out Air Canada. It is a sorry state that allows large corporations to operate monopolies on the backs of our hard working people.
Terry	J	AB	They've scammed me over thousands of dollars in my lifetime. I'm 54 now and maybe it's reached a million. Stop these monopolies immediately.
			Monopolies are much more than a select few entities controlling and having complete unfettered power over a certain market segment. Monopolies are the tools, weapons if you will of a true fascist government. A pure & true democracy is a free capitalistic environment.  I demand a free a capitalistic environment! Allow more competition in every market segment and STOP perpetuating & enabling monopolies.  Monopolies are over priced, over rated excrement shoved down our throats by the government, Bell, Rogers, Loblaw's etc because of the consumer's lack of choice.  Thank you.
Giovanni	P	ON
Vlad	G	ON	Monopolies are only good for the business owner not for the consumer. Our government is being corrupted by the influence of big companies. It is no longer protecting the interest of consumers but the interests of big businesses. We need more competition and stronger regulations.
J E	S	ON	In order to lower my monthly $250.00 bills from Bell and Rogers I stopped using them altogether. I went with a cheaper company and could at least breathe better. However, after doing this... Bell started buying up the smaller companies I was using and I had to try to look for cheaper monthly bills again. All of the big 3 monopolies need to be held to account and stop gouging the Canadian public. We definitely need CHEAPER cell phone charges also CHEAPER internet charges and the government needs to pay attention!!!
Scott	S	AB	When I look at the lack of competition from companies essential to the lives of everyday Canadians, it really makes me question the motives of our government. Why are they allowed to price gouge Canadians while the government of this country does nothing. My grocery bill has skyrocketed and the best the government could do is hold a theatrical question period with zero outcomes? The Big 3 telecom companies have a stranglehold on Canadians meanwhile our governments answer is to allow a massive acquisition?
			For big corporations it's an unrelenting drive to gain market share. Past decades, this has been accomplished by acquiring similar businesses in the same space. Each time, numerous local "mom and Pop" businesses are put out of business, unable to compete by purchasing and marketing power. Move toward corporate wealth, market dominance, and power ultimately without paying the taxes others are subjected to -- results in a huge unfair playingfield to everyone else. The majority of the money, and the power become concentrated in the hands of fewer and fewer people. It also becomes more authoritarian and even fascist. It is not democratic. It is not private enterprise. It is dominance of the marketplace by global and national capitalism. It is an unrelenting drive for profit, influence and power to continue to capitalize on the Earth resources and the people.
Donald	G	BC	Save-on-Foods is 1 block from me, but I need to do most of my grocery shopping elsewhere as the price gouging is outrageous. A good example is a small package of frozen food that is packaged like a Chinese food takeaway box. It has 2 pouches inside with some rice, sauce and a few small pieces of chicken or whatever you picked. There is usually about 5 pieces but I have found as few as 3 small pieces in a pouch. The price started off at about $4.99, then it went to $5.99, then $6.99, then $7.99, then $8.99 and now it is $9.99! I do not buy it at all, it is a ridiculous price. I could go to one of the Asian restaurants and get take out. I would get a lot more food for my money! They raise prices now by $1 at a time, instead of small increases....they seem to be getting the prices of everything up as high as possible, so that when they bring the prices back down, they will still be double what they used to be or even triple in some cases. Corporate greed at its worse, and it is getting out of control. CEO's with multi million dollar salaries, Pigs at a trough, pure and simple. I do not for one second believe any of their nonsense now about supply issues! Yes, there were some issues at the beginning of the pandemic, but we are past most of that now and things are functioning much better. The "shortages" and "supply issues" are PURE BULLSHIT! The corporations are stuffing their pockets with our cash and people are really struggling. I am 73 and diabetic, and I am not able to eat properly as I can't afford very much food. My food and home supplies budget has gone from $100 a week to $40 and I will probably have to drop that to $20 a week. I never buy fresh produce, I buy frozen veggies because I can't afford the fresh product. I also only very, very rarely buy any kind of meat product. Don't even get me started on the sleazy telecom companies! Now there is REAL greed totally out of control. Ridiculous prices, poor service, (remember the Roger's fiasco with downed service and lame excuses?) It's like a rich turd in a sports car running over a kid's bike and then giving him $10 as if that fixes it! I am so very fed up with corporate Canada...it is way past time for the government to fix these issues and stop the rip off, out of control train that is Greedy Corporate Canada! People are expecting and demanding that the government do something and they do nothing. My greatest fear is that the CONservative party (you know - the "Reform-Alliance-Not Progressive-ConArtist Party") will get back in power again and then we will have huge tax breaks for the rich and that tax burden will be shifted to the poorest and the middle class as usual. The new leader of the ConArtist party is a very nasty piece of work and will bring this country to its knees. Canada has never been in this much trouble, the Cons want to reward the Corporations (who support THEM of course), and they will in turn support the Cons with bags of cash to keep them in power. I do not see much hope for us -- the rich will make sure that none of us can ever recover from this pandemic and they will keep us under their feet by whatever means necessary, while they all enjoy their ill gotten wealth and wallow around in their greed.
Allen	S	BC
			I find it almost incomprehensible how the different government bodies that have been set up, supposedly to protect the average Canadian, instead appear to be in control of the corporate bodies that they are supposed to protect us from. The CRTC is supposedly there to regulate and control the airwaves but the only thing they seem to be protecting is the pockets of the corporations and we end up with some of the highest costs on the planet. Then they trumpet what a good job they are doing. I really just don't know if they realize who they are doing it for. We have no competition in this country when it comes to internet, phones and cable tv. That carries over to groceries and transportation especially the airlines. When you consider the extra costs that pretty much every Canadian is paying for these sort of necessities' just to line the pockets of the fortunate few who grow richer because of it, you have to wonder why we are wasting tax payers money protecting these conglomerates. Either the government should start forcing these boards to do the job they are formed to do or they should disband them altogether and let us know that we, as average Canadians, are on our own and will continue to be abused and not taken care of. At least then we will know where we stand and not have to pay the expenses of useless civil servants. I would prefer that they should start doing their jobs and actually protect us against the predatory practices of these corporations and help Canadians pay the prices and have the protections that everyone else in the world seems to have. Hopefully the politicians are going to start realizing how frustrated the average Canadian is before the next election where I feel that things are going to change. I realize how fed up I am and a majority of the people I talk to are in agreement. I definitely am not voting the way I have for the past 51 years since I was 17 unless I see some dramatic changes in the near future.

			I used to have both Bell and Rogers as my internet and TV supplier over time. What Bell did was undercut some of the other suppliers, then after the first year, their monthly price started to go up and up. I then went to Rogers and they offered me a lower price but low and behold, they did the same thing. Some background information. At that time, I was a single mother who was trying to raise my two kids on my own with no support from their father so money was tight to day the least. When I moved up to our present location in Rural Ontario (not in a town or city) with my new husband, neither Bell nor Rogers worked very well at all even for our cell phones. We had to drive up to the top of the hill to get any service even though their tech said we have lots of service. So we went with Xplornet and Shaw for our internet and TV. Recently, Bell put in a tower very close to us and again, offered a much lower price but when they came out, their price also included switching our home phone ) which they hadn't told us before they arrived)...because we were already with Bell, the lower price went away and became so close to what we were already paying it was not worth switching at all. They actually sent a manager out as they were sure we'd have great service being so close to their new tower. But he confirmed we had no signal at all and we stayed with the service providers we had. Now with all these mergers that are happening, we are likely going to have our prices go up again because Bell/Rogers will be running the show. Monopolies are only beneficial to the company who has a monopoly. Not to the individual who has a contract with them. Don't let this go through. They are only buying the client listings and will do what they want down the line.
Diane	H	ON	We are not happy. Monopolies stifle fair market competition, keeping prices high and innovation low. Monopolies also make it possible for the few to create barriers for entry into the market, influencing government, shaping policies and regulations that insulate these companies from disruptive competition. None of this benefits Canadians. Artificially high prices are a financial burden that most consumers cannot avoid for essential services and deplete their resources, preventing spending in other categories and adversely affecting the economy overall. The telecom monopoly of Bell, Rogers, Telus has personally affected me in this regard. I'm resentful that the government has allowed this to happen, permitting the same mistakes seen in the US telecom sector. I'm especially resentful of the failure to support and foster a long-term competitive wireless market.
Chris	B	ON	These setbacks are felt and will continue to be felt on every Canadian's bottom line until the government of the people steps up and protects the interests of its constituents rather than the corporations.
Paula	S	BC	No particular story but they do hurt people. They are getting incredibly richer while ordinary Canadians get poorer. It come down to what kind of society do we want to live in? Fair or unfair.
			Monopolies can have various harmful effects on consumers, competitors, and the economy as a whole. Here are a few examples: Higher Prices: Monopolies can charge higher prices for their products or services because they have no competition. This can be especially problematic for essential goods or services, such as internet and telecommunications services, where consumers have no other options. Limited Innovation: Without competition, monopolies have little incentive to innovate or improve their products and services. This can lead to a lack of innovation, which can be detrimental to the economy in the long run. Reduced Choices: Monopolies can reduce the number of choices available to consumers by buying out or driving out their competitors. This can limit the range of products and services available, as well as limit the diversity of suppliers. Poor Customer Service: Monopolies can have less incentive to provide good customer service, as they do not face competition from other providers. This can lead to poor service quality, long wait times, and other negative customer experiences.
sbuc	k	QC	Bell, Rogers, Telus, Loblaw's, Ticketmaster, and other large corporations in Canada have faced criticism for their monopolistic practices in various industries, such as telecommunications, retail, and ticket sales. Their dominance can limit competition and negatively impact consumers and smaller businesses alike. Price fixing, collusion, stagnation, anti-union, illusion of choice, concentrating wealth to a select few, bloating pricing because there is no real competition, lobbying, abuse of the environment, abuse of employees, high cost of living (this is caused by concentration of wealth, if there were more plebeian owned businesses and less giant corporations wealth would be distributed through the social structure and we would get the middle class back - like how things worked in the early 20th century), stagnation of economy, stagnation of ideas and innovation. The heart of the argument against vast corporate power is this: democracy doesn't exist when private enterprises owned by the few become more powerful than the state - we enter an existence of at best an oligarchy at worst fascism/authoritarian rule. This is hedging too close to the tyranny depicted in Cyberpunk and we're starting to see it move from the realm of fiction to reality and that is honestly terrifying. The government is run or should be run by the people not corporate entities but that's what we have right now. Government needs to please the people to stay in power thus it needs to make them happy/content. A corporation does none of this, has no impetus to treat people well only make money and you make money by exploitation of people, the environment etc.
William	S	AB	We are at a turning point a crisis and we will fail unless we can move past the golden goose of mass profits and not the betterment of nature and ourselves. We stopped the acid rain crisis because we put policy in place that put environment ABOVE vast corporate profits. I hope for our future generations that we can do the same again before its too late before the vast corporations bring us to ecological ruin. Prices are hitting record highs and our salaries are not keeping up. The regular price for a basic internet plan was $0 not too long ago. Now that same plan is regular 70 with a 20$ discount for a year... How?
Gabriel	N	ON	Cereal that was $5 a year ago hit $8. Grocery costs are out of control and without competition there is nobody to stop the big monopolies. It's all about the share holders. How much more do they want to squeeze out of the consumers? There are numerous organizations dedicated to helping Canadians who are in danger of becoming homeless, but if they can't afford the Internet many of these services can't be accessed. A former neighbour of mine contacted me recently, desperate for access to Internet. She is an older woman of limited means. At this point, she is one of the hidden homeless, having secured a couch to sleep on at a friend's house in the country. She recently missed a rent payment due to being in the hospital for two weeks. Due to poor health, she is also out of work. Her former landlord threatens to destroy her belongings if she can't come up with $500.00, and is looking forward to renting her apartment to someone else for much more if she never comes back. To go into the city to try to access some services that may be available to her, or to use the Internet at the library, costs her $40.00 per trip, which she also can't afford. Initially I gave her some phone numbers that should have helped, since she does have limited service on a cell phone. (I'm not even sure if it was her phone.) However, after a frustrating round of telephone tag she quickly discovered that without Internet access she was lost. While looking up sites for my former neighbour, I discovered that most of the services she requires to resolve her housing situation and at least get back her belongings are accessible primarily through the Internet. It is awkward at best for her to be expected to call former colleagues and ask them to find and fill out applications for her on-line. Given that she lives nowhere near me and doesn't have a permanent address at this point, there is only so much I can do to help, as a private citizen. If she could even afford to have the Internet on her cell phone she could access some sites that may be able to help her. So many services depend on access to the Internet that people who have fallen on hard times find it more difficult than ever to pull themselves out. Canada has among the highest mobile phone rates and Internet rates in the world, an injustice that will not be helped by allowing large telecom companies run the show unchecked.
Beverly	P	ON	As a customer of Telus and Bell, I have been subjected to price increases without justification, breaking my contract in doing so. Even when using Telus for home security emergencies, they take forever to respond and I left holding the phone for over 1/2 hour. I have gotten threatening letters from Telus that my system will be suspended for non payment of a bill I didn't know I had. Then I can't get through to them. I am fed up with the cavalier treatment by all the monopolies. No customer service, high prices and going up all the time and impossibility of getting through their "gatekeepers"

ellaína	s	BC	I think the story is the same here in Canada or North America... Seems all the smaller stores have been swallowed up by large corporations who only lower their prices to sink competition and then raise them once they are done. The government appears to be on the side of corporate lobbyists. It has been years that citizens have been complaining about the high prices of cell phones and internet providers here in Canada. Nothing has changed to make it anymore affordable! In fact I do believe it is worse....
James	G	BC	I live in a semi rural area of BC with a limited choice of service providers, I want and deserve more competition because competition brings the price down.
Ryan	B	BC	Monopolies are bad for our economy and bad for capitalism. Their ability to stamp out competition hurts everyone, especially those who already have limited choices. The loophole that allows mergers to occur if the companies can show efficiencies even if the merger would hurt consumers needs to be closed - we need to come first.
Ross	D	AB	Uncompetitive climate with few major players allows unnecessarily high rates on many fronts. Dear Canada Government,  I am writing to you as a concerned citizen, to share my experience and dissatisfaction with the monopolistic practices of companies such as Bell, Rogers, Telus, Loblaws, and Ticketmaster. I believe that monopolies significantly impact the well-being of consumers, and I would like to provide my insights to help address this issue.  One of the main issues I have faced due to monopolies is the lack of choice in the marketplace. For instance, with Bell, Rogers, and Telus dominating the telecommunications industry, I have found it difficult to find alternative providers offering competitive pricing and better services. This limited choice has forced me to accept substandard services and pay inflated prices for basic amenities such as internet, mobile, and cable services.  Moreover, I have been negatively impacted by the practices of Loblaws in the retail sector. With their dominating presence and control over supply chains, it has led to a lack of competition in the market, which I believe has resulted in higher prices and reduced product variety for consumers like myself. The inability to access affordable and diverse products has put a financial strain on my household, making it harder to meet our daily needs.  Ticketmaster, another example of a monopolistic company, has also affected my consumer experience. Due to their control over ticket sales for major events, I have often faced inflated ticket prices, exorbitant service fees, and an overall lack of transparency. This has made attending concerts and other live events a luxury that many, including myself, cannot always afford.  In conclusion, monopolies such as Bell, Rogers, Telus, Loblaws, and Ticketmaster have harmed me as a consumer by limiting my options, inflating prices, and reducing the overall quality of goods and services available. I hope that my experiences can shed light on the negative consequences of monopolies and contribute to the development of policies that promote fair competition and protect consumers' interests.
Oral	G	ON	Thank you for your attention to this matter.
John	D	QC	The monopoly by the big three telecom. providers speaks for itself, that means lack of competition and continual price increases. Loblaws recent quarterly record profits are obscene when so many people/families are struggling to put food on the table. Isn't Canada as a G7 country supposed to be better than this?? Shame on all that allow this to happen.

Frank	S	BC	Competition is good for all not just your political friends
Ellis WYN	R	BC	The ubiquitous "Support local businesses" slogan should be paralleled by "Local businesses support local consumers". I am an octogenarian and feel as if businesses (monopolies, aping small businesses and professional services) want me to continue living just as a consumer to be milked of my hard earned assets. Business shows no concern for contributing to improving general quality of life. All levels of government support this greed by giving too much power to lobbies and professional associations (e.g medical, legal, pharmaceutical, realty ones).
Elizabeth	R	AB	I rely on my cell phone for work, and employers in my job-insecure industry are often not good about supporting that use. So the high rates I'm charged, especially when I have to buy into high end packages to manage data downloads and uploads during fieldwork, frequently come back to me and further undermine my ability to make a sometime-precarious living.
J.	C	BC	The job of braking up monopolies is the Governments job, and its one of its most important jobs!
Devin	Y	BC	I am an Internet Service Provider (ISP). I have been trying to get a response from Telus so I can utilize the infrastructure our tax dollars paid for. They are supposed to let ISPs on the network to allow competition and lower prices. I requested help from our governing body the CRTC more than 9 months ago but never got a response. This year I submitted my CRTC paperwork late so I would get a person to talk to. They sent me to another agency called the CCTS. I have not heard back from them yet but the online forms are for consumers not competitors so I don't expect I'll get a response from them either. Consumers pay too much for telecom because the Big companies block the competition and nobody does anything to stop them.
Fran	L	AB	I live on pension income which does not cover the cost of groceries, home maintenance. vehicle registration, utilities, etc. and forget entertainment.....These large monopolies rake in huge profits while many of us have to use our savings to make ends meet.
			Re: Telus Mobility We have lived in rural British Columbia for some time now, 6 years just south of Powell River at present. For the first year or so, our Telus Mobility reception was fine. Then it started dropping out, often cutting off calls or not even allowing them to be connected. Several neighbours were having the same problem.  Although I complained for over a year, the poor service continued and Telus said there was nothing they could do about it. Elsewhere, my cellphone worked fine.  Then, out of the blue, service was restored and has remained so ever since. I heard a rumour that Telus had redirected their signal when the service was first compromised, even though they would not admit it. Since then, I have noticed some Telus repeater towers close to us.  I am not complaining now that the signal has been restored but I am still upset with Telus for not doing more and being more transparent when the problem was actually occurring. Although they never admitted a problem, they did provide me with a free landline when I could not connect with my cellphone.
Paul	M	BC	If there was more competition in Canada, perhaps an alternate provider would have given better service. As it stands, Telus owns and controls all of the towers in our area.
			Monopolies keep prices far too high. This applies to all of them, be they grocery or telecom. Canadians pay at or near the highest rates for cell phone usage in the world. This, in a so-called democratic country where we have an abundance of everything if you can afford them. Healthy competition would greatly reduce the costs and provide better service. With respect to grocery prices, we've seen costs go through the roof and nobody is saying anything or doing anything about it. In recent chats with our grocery monopolies, they cried about ever increasing costs to them so they HAVE to pass on the costs, all the while their profits continue to rise. How can this be.
Kelly	E	AB	Kelly Exner
Thomas	P	ON	Big monopolies are KILLING us with their big prices which they can keep increasing as there's NO competition! Government MUST do their jobs (that the PEOPLE elected them for) and FORCE them to lower prices or charge them a tax on excess profits! When I was a little girl, there was a corner store literally down the block from me. It provided meaningful employment for the family that ran it and was a connection point for the community as well. We also had a local meat shop - very highly recommended throughout the city I grew up in. This was because they were willing to talk to the customers about their preferences. Today, there are big grocery stores where you don't connect with local community members. You are at a distance from the management and your preferences are not their problem. Often, one company owns a whole collection of stores and dictates what products will be sold. This not a locally responsive business model. We need more small businesses that are responsive to their local customers, not large grocery monopolies that don't really care if you can afford the food they're selling. The profit is not supporting meaningful employment for people proud of their enterprise. The profit goes to share holders who are more concerned with their increased wealth. It's time to end the ability for companies to run monopolies over wide service areas. And the problem is not just grocery stores, but all kinds of goods and services.

			For a few years, I had a reasonably priced VOIP service with Magic Jack. Then, it started breaking down. I spent many days and lots of money trying to fix it, and finally went with no phone at all for four years.
Bob	S	SK	When I needed a phone to do business under quarantine, I got the strong impression that executive bonuses were based on how much cell service I bought but did not use. It was a real shell game. Once, I made a payment that was just taken for no reason at all. I can't get proper bills, and I'm charged for a service I boycott.
marco	c	MB	Monopolies are centralization, puts too much power in the hands of a few, they can change policies and influence institutions to eliminate healthy competition so they can rip off the public. Just look at our Liberal Government.
			Greed and selfishness.
Andre	L	QC	They want more money and only for their own benefits.
			The rest of us can struggle, they don't care, they aren't interested in the rest.
May	S	ON	This behaviour is just destroying everything.
			We live in one of the most expensive countries in the world because every industry in Canada is monopolized by couple of giant corporations.
			The grocery giant federal government pricing and profits committee inquiry was a joke. A bunch of government amateurs questioning private sector CEOs. Any one with any industry experience would know that manufacturers pay volume sales commissions to the grocery chains on top of margins and can hide them anywhere. Where were the highly paid government consultants to question the CEOs or bring the government committee members up to speed on industry practises.
			Talk about amateurs. The bill of rights for airline passengers was written by amateurs like Garnier and his department. Who couldn't see the airline industry stepping around this bill.
			We were denied any compensation from West Jet when they cancelled our flight from UK to Toronto without any notice last September with no offer of anything when it was rescheduled for the next day. Additional cost to us was $800 uncompensated.
			Said it was a maintenance problem. Yeah right? Anyone with a brain could have seen this flaw in the bill.
			Now the bill is being rewritten to strengthen it as Garnier retires. Thank goodness.
			That's the problem in Canada with a small market dominated by monopolies in Telecom, banks, airlines, grocery stores, CBC and oil companies and no effective mechanism to monitor and control this by government or government agency or strong public/private agency with government influence or teeth. Forget about the expense to Canadians of the toothless CRTC.

Trevor	J	BC	As a senior with limited needs, I object to the constant demands to upgrade, and virtual necessity to pay for services I do not need.
			AND REQUIREMENT TO USE A CELL PHONE FOR ALMOST EVERY ACCESS!
			Better competition would make it more likely that one or more companies would provide simple services and reasonable prices.
Kirsten	M	BC	Big corporations eat the small locals deplete the competition and then we have no choice.
			More charges for not having Wi-Fi on all the time. When I have it at home and it j=us dos not stay on my phone!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
Nolan	G	AB	The big 3 have been secretly gouging consumers for years! It's time to open the market to competition! How can you prove the reliability of only 3 major infrastructure players? That's right, we saw the Rogers outage had taken down the entire government and financials systems nationally. This is not a good method of ensuring redundancy
			For Ticketmaster: When the Worlds Womens Hockey Championships were in Winnipeg, Manitoba years ago, I ordered tickets on line with Ticketmaster. I didn't want to but had no choice. We had tickets for all the dates except the final game. I tried and tried but was unable to get them. My sister when she was well had been a hockey player. So we flew from Vancouver to Winnipeg, stayed in a hotel and went to all the games we had tickets for. To see our Canadian women play was spectacular and all the other countries, as well. All the time I was there I went to their office in the venue, I phoned and was unable to get a ticket, they kept making excuses and finally the night of the venue we got tickets and were sat in the nose bleed section. My sister was very exhausted and she was unable to sit there as it was too uncomfortable. I begged and pleaded for the staff and finally when they realized she was in a wheelchair they sat us in the half empty disabled section. Thanks to them, we saw the fantastic winning game for Canada. If I hadn't have been so aggressive, we would have missed the most important game.
elizabeth	I	NL	Since that day, my feelings on Ticketmaster border on hatred Plus and the sooner we get rid of this criminal corrupt corporation the better it will be for all of us. The venue is quite capable of selling tickets and we do not need them. They are just another corporation in Canada hated and abuses our citizens. I will never forget this and because of their monopoly I have missed many exceptional concerts, venues etc. Until Canada gets rid of them I will just do without, which makes no sense since they are another american greedy corporation!
			I am on permanent disability. The feds decided during the pandemic that everyone needed $2000 per month to survive, an amount almost double what disability pays. Now prices are rising, our basic cell service just went up $10 a month. Gas is higher home heating is higher electricity is higher cell plans are higher groceries are higher, yet there is no more money. Even those working are struggling as all these costs go up but the wages do not. Most of these cost increases can be firmly proven to stem from our federal governments love of large companies (and giving themselves raises tied to these increases) and the total disregard they have for the average Canadian. I just want to be able to afford to live while our government is determined to pocket as much as they can for themselves and their friends who run the monopolies on our essential services and products.
Robert	D	SK	The older I get the more despair I feel and the more convinced I am that no matter who the people elect, big corporations have the power and the money to lobby incessantly and override and drown out the voice of the electorate. I want governments at all levels to do what they promised, act for the people and stop putting the voice of money and big corporations always first.
Sarah	C	BC	I had moved overseas some time ago. Cancelled my Shaw account and paid my last bill before I left. When I returned 8 months later I went to deactivate my account only to discover Shaw hadn't actually cancelled it and I now owed 8 months of bills plus overdue fees. I called them and went to their service centre, but they said they had no record of my call. They investigated, but despite seeing that there had been no activity on the account for the last 8 months, only offered to reduce what they said I owed by half. Thanks for nothing, crooks.
Josh	G	BC	Monopolies remove market choices. The companies keep saying doing so doesn't impact quality of service nor prices, BUT the evidence is clear that it does.
			e.g. Telecom - Prices for mobile plans for provinces with other options e.g. SK with SaskTel see much more competitive prices compared to provinces that don't have alternatives. There's no reason why Telus will offer a lower price in SK for the same package as in BC other than that fact that SaskTel exists and their prices are lower.
Cheryl	C	BC	e.g. Rogers don't feel it's necessary to ensure correct contingency plans to ensure their services are reliable. There's a full day of chaos when Rogers network went down because everything, including payment services is on Rogers. It was awful.
			We were forced to pay for TV in order to keep our home phone # when we moved to a new address in the same town. No alternative according to Rogers.
Elizabeth	P	ON	Monopolies mean less competition and higher prices for food, phone, etc.
Tom	C	ON	SUPER TELCO RATES ARE TOO HIGH AND THAT SUCKS. ROGER SHAW MERGER STIFLES REAL COMPETITION . NEED FOREIGN COMPETITION AS IN EUROPE, MIDDLE EAST TO FOSTER REAL COMPETITION.
			Monopolies are the worst thing for the people. When I travelled to Australia 25 years ago my phone plan was better than in Canada and at half the price because of the amount of independent companies competing for my money. With Monopolies they charge whatever they feel like which in turn hurts the consumer. 30 years ago you had a choice whether you had a cell phone but with the increase in everything becoming digital people don't have a choice anymore.
			I am travelling at the moment and Telus failed to inform me that if a connection was poor with Wi-Fi then it would automatically turn on data even though I had data turned off which led to astronomical charges that they refused to remove basically saying too bad. If it was a smaller independent company they would have informed me when I entered another country that this was a possibility and I would incur extra charges and would be more understanding than companies that have a monopoly.
Luke	B	BC	Where's the competition? If Canada is not a country of open and fair competition then it is time for proper regulation that keeps prices down, especially in the present economic situation! Me thinks that the governing party may not be the party of the people, rather the party of big business!?
Richard	S	ON	I just needed to buy a packet of tie on label tags, and went to Staples (Canada) where the price was $6.59 . I then went to my local chain dollarstore, and bought a pack of the same size and quantity for $1.75.
			I bought oranges in Superstore ( Loblaws) and they cost just under $1.00 each in a pack. I bought a pack of sliced turkey for $6.00 that previously was $5.00 a pack. That is greater than the rate of inflation. I have many similar grocery and household purchases with the same or greater inflated monopolistic price increases. Cauliflower (Not large) at $6.00 each.
A Canadian Purchaser	a	BC	In fairness, Loblaws locally have not increased the price of bananas, but that is the only item in my shopping list that has not been subject to a substantial price increase.
David	P	BC	where i live I have two options! stay with shaw if and when they merge with Rogers ( which I DO NOT WANT TO DO) or drop my TV and network service AND HAVE NO TV AND NETWORK SERVICE AT ALL!!! some choice huh????
			Take alook at increased rates to use your phone while traveling. Before Roger's was $5.00 per day to protect you from roaming fees, with a cap of $50 a month traveling in the US.
Morris	S	BC	Today average rate is $14 per day with a monthly cap of $280 dollars!

Evert	v	MB	Large companies always start off by saying they want to make things better for the consumers but once they have a monopoly they all jack prices higher and never are competitive, they don't have to be, no one challenges them. Every organization that has a monopoly or is large enough can raise prices to what ever they want. Banks, grocery stores , lumber companies and drug companies ALL profited from the pandemic at our cost. Billions of dollars of our money was soaked from our pockets whether we noticed it or not. Why should the average consumer/tax payer be exploited when the large corps make record profits?? STOP LARGE COMPANIES FROM OWNING MONOPOLIES AND CHARGING WHAT EVER THEY FEEL LIKE CHARGING. Competition keeps everyone in line including Rogers, Bell, Royal bank , Home depot and many others.
Wolfgang	H	BC	When I connected my computer with the Internet more than ten years ago I decided to use "uniserve" for the service - my cost was about $50/month. One day without warning my service worked no longer. Eventually I learned that TELUS had been providing the service for "uniserve" and had installed the 5G service to my condominium claiming that my connection had been falling apart. The only solution was to switch my connection from "uniserve" to TELUS at more than twice the cost (over more than $100). I have since moved to the Mulberry retirement home in Burnaby where I am now paying $42/month.
			The Bell, Rogers and Telus stranglehold on our communications infrastructure is very detrimental to our ability to afford two very necessary utilities. Internet and mobile phone access are no longer luxuries but these big companies are making it luxuries which only the rich can afford or those with company or government expense accounts can enjoy.
			How does one call for help in an emergency if they do not have a cell phone?. How can one keep up with necessary information, education, employment skills without Internet Access?
			How can one afford to eat when big food conglomerates like Loblaws, Sobeys and Metro profit from jacked up food prices?
			Canadians are a free people and we love a great live concert. It lifts our spirits but the likes of a very greedy TicketMaster monopoly is making that pleasure another luxury that we can no longer afford.
Kenneth	L	ON	We need a government that truly works for the people, not big corporations. The big question is, where is that government? It truly looks like it is missing in Canada.
			The lack of telecommunications diversity in a world of technology is desperately lagging Canadians behind, especially with the rising cost of everything!
			How is the general public or those who rely of these services (like tech sector workers, work from home and small business ) supposed to survive while tech giants are absorbing all the smaller internet services that were once affordable?
Melissa	M	ON	We should be ashamed of what's happening to the the basic costs of having internet or cell connections. We are embarrassing low of the global list of affordable telecommunications.
LOUIS-PHILIPPE	L	ON	TOO MUCH HIGH PRICE, NOT ENOUGH COMPETITION, MONOPOLY MENTALITY AND CUSTOMER SERVICES (AS IN LACKING OF...) EVEN THE CHEAPEST OUT THERE MAKES A LOT OF MONEY AND THE BIGGER ONES ALWAYS HOSTILE TAKE OVER THERE COMPANY TO KEEP THEIR MONOPOLIES AND GOBBLE UP THEIR CLIENTS
			When I was a schoolgirl, we learned about the abusiveness of monopolies, and we learned the history of how monopolies were forced to break up, to the benefit of society, in the early 20th century (e.g. Standard Oil). We as a society seem to have forgotten the lessons we learned from this. It is NEVER in the public's best interest for any business to hold a monopoly.
			We can see the costs of monopolies in our lives every day. While ordinary Canadians are having trouble paying for groceries, grocery monopolies are making record profits. While ordinary Canadians cannot afford needed medicines, Big Pharma is making record profits. While Canadians pay more than other countries for basic cell service, telecoms are making record profits. It's the same story, over and over again.
Katherine	M	BC	Government is supposed to be for the people, not for the big corporations. Do your job and rein in these telecom bullies.
Damian	D	ON	Overall, Canada is lost we slowly slide into Communism system but much worse.
			What I hate most is that they can set whatever prices they want and we don't have many other alternatives. Take for example the cost of our cell phone subscription. In Canada the cost is way higher than anywhere else in the world. Why? Because Bell, ROGERS and Telus are the only options we have. The same goes for the grocery chains. There are only a few and they own everything out there so they can set the prices they want.
Evelyn	D	QC	Everything just goes up since there is no one left to compete and offer deals. There are deals but they are hidden and hard to find since the big Monopolies want to say they offer things at fair price, but you need to hunt and jump through hoops in order to get a discount.
Robert	S	ON	More competition offers fair prices as the market has more selections and offers more companies to enter the market.
Keith	O	AB	Prices for services continually go up, with no palpable return in services. The more the companies consolidate the more they will be able to increase prices with no push back.
			I'm unable to shop at places owned by Loblaws, such as Real Canadian Superstore for example. The prices of the food that I will be purchase at that place in question is far too expensive & the prices continue to rise to the point where continuing to shop at the places in question will be financially out of reach. Monopolies have hurt me & so many other low income individuals like me for far too long & that really needs to change. Monopolies have no place in today's society & therefore must be stopped at all costs.
Mike	M	BC	the pricing on big tech is over pricing our internet, tv and cell or home line. we need better price for them
Christopher	S	ON	Our bills continue to rise, our income is not keeping up with all these massive price increases, the big only care about profit, its up to the government to step in.
Dino	C	ON	"Canada is NOT a country of open and fair competition"
David	G	ON	my wife and I elderly pensioners (canada & old age ) on a very limited income . we have watched our costs rise tremendously over the last 5 -6 yrs , while our OAS income has gone up less than $10.00 . Our cpp has increased by 100.00.
reginald	e	ON	All of these increases dont even begin to cover ourincreased food costs , it alone all the other increased costs.And then to add to the problems we watch the big grocery gisnts brag about their record profits,that increased amazingly without the aid of price gouging Monopolies are ruining people quality of life in Canada! The Government need to tighten the laws around competition Act otherwise these violations of price gauging with excuses of demand/supply will manipulate the Act and the people. They avoid accountability with accounting statements which cover various entities whereas they should be questioned on a specific item such as dairy products or processed food or basic internet plans?
			People's wages do not go up significantly every year and even when minimum wage is scheduled to rise its not in line with inflation. Again these big monopolies protest against a decent minimum wage and then expect customers to pay exorbitant prices by making choices between food or shelter!
F	D	ON	I no longer can afford a house phone or cable vision.
			When it comes to buying food or gasoline or paying rent, it sucks.
Michele	S	BC	I don't have a choice on rent. That or live in my car. Then I could afford to have a phone and internet and proper food.
			Monopolies charge Monopoly rent and higher prices for consumers.
			Being a monopoly, they have market power over their customers.
			Allowing some monopolies to exist for public services is important as they provide services we need, like water, and sewage removal among other public services. However, private companies that are monopolies do not allow customers to get competitive prices nor good services. They are poor at good services. That is why government should try to deregulate industries and allow more competition when they can push out monopolies and bring in competitive industries.
Mark	B	ON	We need more competition in New Brunswick. There are too many big monopolies and very little completion. We are to be a free country and to truly make it free, we need. more completion to keep prices at a competitive edge.
James	M	NB	It is really quite simple..... it has to do with greed and access to personal power for the CEOs and shareholders of these mega-corporations. They are corporations, not entities! They are All making record profits, NOT, "razor thin profits" as Galen would have us believe. They are NOT paying their fair share of taxes nor are they regulated enough. Because of this, millions of people are suffering at the supermarkets, using their phones or internet, or having the ability to lighten up their lives by going to a concert!
			We are a democratic, socialist country, these corporate entities are turning Canada into an autocratic dictatorship ruled by the rich and elite .....I want to see a federal and provincial government that takes these corporations on by, taxing their "razor thin profits", holding them accountable for contributing to poverty, inequality and damage to our ecosystems. Enough is enough .... they are out of control.

			A monopoly's potential to raise prices indefinitely is its most critical detriment to consumers. Because it has no industry competition, a monopoly's price is the market price and demand is market demand. Even at high prices, customers will not be able to substitute the good or service with a more affordable alternative.
Sanjeev	H	ON	As the sole supplier, a monopoly can also refuse to serve customers. If a monopoly refuses to sell an important good to a company, it has the potential to indirectly shut down that business. If the supplier sells to consumers, it can refuse to serve areas that have lower profit potential, which could further impoverish a region. Please STOP big companies buying small ones. Its bad for everyone, country and its economy.
Ron	W	BC	My telecom bill is among the largest of all my personal monthly expenditures. The companies are able to jack their rates without any notification to the customer. The price of our telecom services is absolutely ridiculous compared to other G7 countries and it's because consumers don't have sufficient choice! Ticketmaster has license to rip off their customers! It is absolutely WRONG that I am forced to use a third-party provider and that I cannot purchase a ticket DIRECTLY from the presenter. This has driven entertainment costs through the roof! Please, for the love of God, implement policies that ENCOURAGE competition and give Canadians more choices! NO MORE MONOPOLIES!
Karl	K	ON	First of all I am a senior on a fixed income. My experience with both Bell and Rogers is that they could never get the billing right. I would spend over an hour on the phone talking with representatives verifying that corrections would be reflected on the next bill. Only to find on the next bill nothing has changed and charges have increased. Rogers actually ended up repaying $400+ in over charges when I quit them.
Michael	m	NS	I now use a small service provider for my internet and cable. Unfortunately it seems the government has little interest in fair competition in this sector. Ticketmaster? I can't afford that, what a joke. Cellphone plans it's all the same companies, no realistic competition here. We need more competition in the internet and cell phone companies. The prices in these companies are outrageous. The power and water companies are just as bad. Please allow more companies to compete.
Adrian	G	QC	The Big 3 have been steadily increasing pricing for ever, we need competition they have single handily killed off ebox and other beloved small isp. How is it indie isp are not allowed fiber but Bells buys ebox and now they have fiber for $60. Its unfair and dishonest to much back door politics on the part of Bell, Rogers & Telus.
Florian	R	QC	For some time the government doesn't want to accept that we're dealing with monopolies or oligopolies in Canada in different sectors. Technically, the problems in Canada result more from oligopolies, than monopolies. Nevertheless, the impact is similar - higher prices with fewer options. Grocery margins in Canada are twice those in the US. In Canada, the premium grocery retailers own the discount retailers, eg Loblaw's & No Frills; Sobeys & FreshCo; etc. They will not sacrifice margins for market share because they don't have to - the few competitors, equally integrated, share common goals. The same applies in telecommunications and financial services. Corporations don't need help. They need sensible regulation. Consumers need help....
Will	S	ON	No more monopoly
Larry	L	ON	The monopolies of Bell, Rogers, Telus etc. have been charging Canadians a lot more for their internet and t.v. Services in CANADA than people pay in the u tied states or Europe. This has got to stop. We need to break these monopolies and support smaller enterprises.
E.	H	BC	When there is a lack of competition, the big monopolies can charge whatever they want and know that consumers have no choice but to pay.
			Canadians pay one of the highest cell phone bills in the world and it is embarrassing. I pay way too much for basic service and this has to stop.
			Grocery stores are owned by a few private entities and is the same story. They can charge whatever they please. When I shop at my local grocers, not only is the quality of the produce higher, but far cheaper.
Jason	C	QC	Please break up the large monopolies and start working for Real Canadians instead of supporting the lobbyists. As politicians, you represent The People, not Big Business.
Alexander	C	QC	These oligopolies are harming every facet of life for Canadians. There is no accountability for the giants. They can just jack the prices up on their services any time and have done so over the course of their existence. It is morally wrong to allow these companies to keep operating as they are. It is also economically hazardous. If no can afford these services how can they make money. It's self destructive.
Warren	C	QC	1) Lived in Italy for five months with a Telus contract. Ran out of minutes with Vodaphone in the middle of Rome; had to connect internationally to Telus and pay $25 for 10 minutes of use in 2018. 2) Less a horror story and a comparison of what telephone service/ISPs could be: Telecom South Korea charged me only $30 for service and a router rental for internet and $35 for mobile services. Best service I have experienced, despite their failings and the language barrier.
Simon	P	AB	The disadvantages of monopolies include price-fixing, low-quality products, lack of incentive for innovation, and cost-push inflation. This turn these companies into predators on Canadian society. The way to go is free-market competition.
Brad	K	ON	Our country is a joke and a laughing stock worldwide because of the extortionist prices enabled by our government "policies". We need an END TO ALL MONOPOLIES in Canada NOW. Open our borders to international competition. Completely disband the CRTC as it has never truly served Canadian interests outside of corporate toadying. Make our country something to be proud of!
Cheryl	W	AB	Monopolies hurt everyone, it makes the price of goods too high, corporate GREED has to stop and the government who is elected by the people should be held accountable as corporations. Government should not be in the pocket of these corporations, most average workers break their backs to make these companies prosper with no fair wages. I can't afford a concert, groceries are way too expensive: internet and cable are 10 times higher than other companies, phone bills are unaffordable. Lob laws and other grocery companies are making record profits, it has to stop, people will revolt, government needs to sop the Greed and profiteering and protect the people who vote them in. Get some balls and do something.
Roy	L	BC	Monopolies hold ordinary people hostage with their wildly high prices, exploit our lack of choice, and use their massive pull to undermine democracy. But right now, I am speaking out against monopolies controlling an industry. We need innovation a freedom offering the best competitive prices for the public.
Antonio	F	ON	Monopolies tend to charge what ever they want which is not beneficial to all people.
Terry	S	MB	As a pensioner forced to live under the poverty level by the federal government's control of the CPP and OAS, I can not afford to trust the good intentions of a board of directors whose first obligation is to increase the profitability of the shareholders and not ensuring fairness and affordability for it's customers. Therefore I am forced to depend on the government to represent me. A futile hope at best. I would greatly appreciate on this occasion that my representatives refrain from accepting gifts and graft from corporations and have a care for those you have already forced to live in poverty. Thank you very much. heading toward me I would not have known.... would they even be liable? ... I THINK NOT !For 3 years I had a "rocket stick" with Rogers and one day out on the road when I heard about an approaching storm. I fired up the laptop to see how soon it was coming, and the stick is not working.
			I later found out that they abandon that technology and did not inform me that they discontinued it. I went to the Rogers outlet and they tried to up sell me to their latest mobile tech.
			I did not receive so much as a "we are sorry for the inconvenience" ... If a tornado was heading toward me who knows what would have happened.
			I think they are able to behave that way because there is so little competition and I believe that the CRTC is corrupt and should be overhauled.
Ben	F	ON	They are not looking out for what is best for the general public.
Fouad	H	BC	Monopolies will lead not only to the death of capitalism, but to the death of democracy in this country. It is shameful how the Canadian government continues to leave these corporate behemoths free to get away with staggeringly disproportionate profits.
Dan	J	AB	My family and many others that I know have seen constant upward pricing on almost everything we need and use. Even the necessities of life are becoming hard for people to afford as corporate profiteering runs rampant. We need strong, transparent oversight of industries. In the case of electricity, gasoline, fuels and food, I believe we may need to return to completely public ownership and development to protect our citizens and ensure we don't continue this punitive course for our country's vulnerable and working poor.

Jason	E	BC	Canadians pay some of the highest prices in the world, for subpar internet, cellular, and cable tv services. This is due to the monopoly and lack of competition in this country for these services for regular daily living. This issue also includes Loblaw's and grocery prices. The end result is that these companies hold Canadians hostage with their high prices, and not very many other choices available. Canadians pay an extraordinarily high proportion of their income, just on regular living expenses, compared to other first world nations. This also includes housing costs, but that's another issue, albeit exacerbated by the monopolies and lack of competition in this country, for the goods and services that Canadians need for everyday living.
Geordie	N	AB	When I came back to Canada from the UK my biggest reverse culture-shock was dealing with our obscenely expensive cell phone plans. Canadians pay one of the highest rates if not the highest for Internet and cell phones in the world. We are a G7 nation. I don't buy the excuse of a large geography and low population. The practises of these telecom monopolies is unacceptable. I'm tired of the government condoning or ignoring this behaviour. The price of Internet is unreasonable. And all these companies penalize you if you are someone who is not living in a place for more than one year at a time. People move around in the country, or even a city, especially young adults and then they penalize them with a higher fee. Their business practices are not reflective of the 21st century life. This is unacceptable.
Barry	M	AB	HEALTHY FOOD SHOULD BE CHEAP AND ACCESSABLE FOR EVERYONE.
Jonathan	B	ON	Bell and Rogers residential internet service is horrible and over priced. They do not offer static IPs for residential internet service, but a lot of indie ISPs do for a small fee ($4-5 / month). Bell and Rogers force you to upgrade to Business class internet service for a static IP and charge $30 / month for the static IP! What effort is a static IP, 5 seconds for a person to click a checkbox in a GUI once. Bell and Rogers also have no IPv6 residential internet service. Without competition our internet services will stay in the dark ages and be way overpriced.
Keleegh	S	BC	Monopolies deny individual right for choice; just ram the corporate price through with no opportunity to lower costs. Enough.
John	H	BC	Monopolies and or near Monopolies like in Canada's telecom/ internet and grocery sectors are the furthest thing from a free market. There size leads to ability to corrupt competition by deep discounting to force small independents into selling out to them or going out of business. Then they proceed to hike prices with at best no increase in quality of product or service, and the public has no where else to realistically go for fair prices and choice!
Frank	D	ON	To whom is in charge of antitrust affairs of big monopolies. This is a notice that these companies like Rogers, Enbridge have are trying to create more wealth at the expense of the common people of Canada. The basic needs of the ordinary people of this country are at risk by monopoly. This will be the downfall of the governments that are in power now. Enbridge has raised their rates to the consumer of Canada in just over a year by 60+%. Where is the justification for that. People have to use natural gas to heat their house, water and cook.. by allowing Rogers to take over Shaw Communication will certainly do the same raise the rates way beyond the cost of living.
Gonzalo	H	ON	the fees are the worst for Ticketmaster, I worked at Loblaw's, and the amount of food and plastic waste is incredible, they do a little but much more needs to be done.
			What I hate about monopolies is how they have become so greedy.
			Their companies are grown using tax payer's dollars and they steadily increase their prices so that CEOs gain their yearly bonuses that are so outrageously large, while consumers are left with limited choices and often have to pay exorbitant prices to have BASIC options.
			Monopolies also stifle innovation and competition, as smaller companies are unable to compete with the resources and market power of the monopolies, so they end up closing their doors or worse... they're sold to the monopolies.
			This leads to less variety and lower quality products and services for consumers.
			Overall, the unchecked power of monopolies is detrimental to both consumers and the economy as a whole.
			It's a shame that I have to even voice this for you to understand that most of us Canadians really are not that STUPID in thinking otherwise.
Trish	P	ON	Disappointed Canadian, Trish Parr 525 Rilton Rd. N., Oshawa ON Canada L1G 5R4
Shaun	R	ON	We have to stop the gameplan of the Monopolies where they by a competitor to "capture and kill" the better and more affordable product they are offering. Rogers is by far the worst with Bell not far behind. They have put a stranglehold on smaller internet and mobile carriers by restricting network access.
			Enough!
			I used to walk away from the minor billing infractions with Bell (1995), Telus (1999), Rogers (see below), and Wind-Freedom-Shaw (who cut my internet usb-dongle service in the middle of a Zoom court hearing, May 2022, with still half a month prepaid as unannounced they switched to 5G). So, I am back to further market consolidation in 2022 from Public-Koodo-Telus. Rogers finally admitted in 2011, it had fraudulently billed me $11,000 from 2004 to 2008, would not engage in arbitration as it was contractually obliged from 2011 to 2016, when it claimed further fraudulent charges to terminate my contract. That allowed me to then file claim into court. They have continued to evade the court process. My claim is now $4Mn in accrued interest because the adhesion contract was unclear on whose balance in arrears incurred 2% per month the contract provided, which term they later changed. Consumer Protection Act does not allow after the fact changes to adhesion contracts that disadvantage the consumer. The only course for Rogers is to evade court process as they have been, notwithstanding the Wireless Services Agreement Act (which further trebled the refund to keep these cases from jamming the courts, as Doug Ford cancelled in 2018). So, I must pursue forcing the court into default judgement. Then face challenging Rogers appeals such as they have done without any legal basis even to Court of Appeal in a class action. I cannot get counsel unless as a class action while my case is so specific. I have filed within claim limitations which I doubt any other customer in 2004 has been able to pursue, and I must do so as self-representing litigant. Rogers is a case all the other telecoms see and do, what one does the others follow. Rogers cheats, steals, deceives, and obfuscates responsibility in contract breach, then resort to legal harangues cannibalizing the customer, (resources) trying to get justice for the money owed them. By contract terms Rogers now owes me $4Mn accrued refund, my costs at substantial indemnity rates, and to that the court can add punitive damages. The proviso is if I live long enough.
Hans	G	ON	Bell just keeps upping. The price of internet despite delivery becoming more efficient and groceries are completely unaffordable despite record grocery store profits of late. How about busting up monopolies and increasing competition?
Care	R	ON	Without competition everything gets worse over time. Banks become slow, internet provider do not care about higher demand, cell phone operators don't care to upgrade their networks and services, grocery stores can set any prices they want and sell crap. There should be diversity in every service so that people could show what they like and what they dislike.
Danil	T	QC	Year after year, report after yet another report, the end result remains the status quo. We have powerful rhetoric and theory but when it comes to practice the usual suspects are untouchables. Our sacred and always business first and bend over backwards friendly approach impacts an increasingly struggling society that no longer is trying to get ahead because they are consumed with not following even further behind. Indicate what agencies exist in this country that actually have teeth with bite (any level of government will suffice). Why are we treading on eggshells making suggestions and recommendations? This is upside down. We are not here to serve them. They are providing services requiring our participation. I thought that was the definition of capitalism? Instead we are forced fed with choose any colour you like as long as it is a limited shade of grey. It is not the responsibility of companies let alone monopolies to hold themselves accountable to consumer standards. Especially, when they are in name only. How long can you feed people with empty promises and treat them as a laughingstock?
Bart	H	AB	The prices I pay for internet use are excessively high.
Dave	C	BC	The market needs to be opened for competition.

			Though I shop in different stores, my groceries this calendar year have averaged $100 per bag! That is very little meat, and no convenience processed foods. Way too much! Butter at almost $7 per pound. It was $3.99 in January 2021.
			Costs of phone and internet but mostly mobile phones are rapaciously high in Canada. No other country charges so much, not even third world countries. Our govt gives these companies free rein... appalling.

			Allowing monopolies or even oligopolies ravages competition, removing the power of the marketplace. It also creates risky societal conditions where these just one company failing or becoming compromised can have an enormous effect on daily operations of the country (see the Rogers outage last year). This even potentially leaves national security stakes in the hands of corporations not loyal to Canada, but to international shareholders, or those they are beholden to. With little reason to innovate or reduce prices to compete with other companies, the market becomes like a dictatorship of the economy, leaving the consumer powerless instead of giving the freedom and choice we value in our country. Especially with inelastic goods like tech, food, and communications, these essential services need to be highly regulated, diversified, and perhaps even put up against crown corporations to compete (see telecom rates in provinces with government corps vs those without).

Erwin	D	ON	Recently we were in the market for renting an apartment and to our astonishment found that they all come with "free" internet service from Bell or Rogers (depending on the building). I thought that tied selling was illegal in Canada. Hello. I moved to a rural area back in 2005 to live a quieter life. I knew back then that dial-up internet was the only service offering available but believed that things would change shortly thereafter. Since then, however, despite numerous announcements and investments by various levels of government, I still struggle to get reliable and affordable internet service in my rural area. As of right now, the only companies that can offer service to me are Telus, Rogers, and Bell (having used them all). Sadly, they are still all overpriced and the service is spotty and unreliable in many cases. With all the promises made by the federal and provincial governments in the past to deliver affordable and available internet access to rural areas, this still hasn't happened in my case. It would actually make more sense for the CRTC to force the large Telcos to cap prices for rural customers who have very few options and allow them to battle it out in the urban market where most of their revenues are generated. Another option would be to only subsidize smaller competitors so they can expand into the rural market to increase competition in this specific market. After 18 years of living in the country, it's sad to see that little progress has been made to deliver affordable rural internet services. Given this, it makes more sense to simply provide internet (and TV) tax credits to rural customers in order to offset the higher costs of these services instead of providing subsidies and funding to the large Telcos to (supposedly) fund their expansion in rural areas. Its something to seriously consider since these monopolies will surely continue to operate as they have in the past. Action and change is needed immediately to address this ongoing issue. Thank you for listening. I look forward to seeing real positive change in the near future.

Today we have NONE of it, subsequently we suffer. As the old adage says "time is money", so who pays me for the time lost on countless Rogers Customer Support calls fighting to get my money back and avoid incorrect services billing??? In this case, I have lost in two ways: paying expensive bills for Plan Services that still require countless hours on my part to resolve with my mobile provider, and the time I took away from spending with my family, participating in community activities (volunteering), as well as simply getting a chance to relax in the peace and quite of my back yard after a week's mad-rush of work and attempts to meet my commitment!!!

John	C	ON	Several years ago I left Rogers (Cell and television). The next month I checked what I thought was my last bill and saw that had not stopped taking automatic payments, and had taken another month, around $230. I called and the person who answered said that she "saw" I had cancelled service, but saw no "note" (I assume an internal correspondence) that said to stop payment. Although she did stop the automatic payments, she would not refund the money that was stolen from me. The legal costs to recoup $230 would not be worth it. I wonder how many times this happens - that the company's internal paperwork is undone or incomplete, and continuing charges are made. Why isn't this investigated? Is it intentional? I suspect it is, that's how skeptical I am of any corporate morality in any telecom company.
David	C	ON	Rogers is terrible service and terrible support and I know from experience. Friends and family tell me that Bell and Telus are not much better. Why is the government giving these horrible companies more power? They should be split up into small pieces or taken over by local public governments. At the very least, they should be forced to compete with crown corporations or community-based internet and phone services. This government always seems to be heading in the wrong direction. If you continue this way, you're going to lose my vote forever!
Harold	S	AB	I learned in school many years ago that monopolies were bad, very bad. There weren't too many monopolies back then, however now where ever you look there are monopolies every where and more and more appearing every day, as you read about take overs of small companies by bigger companies. When there isn't any competition then the monopolies can charge what ever the traffic can bear. That means that if you have the big bucks you are just fine, however if you don't, then you are S.O.L. Our governments have the tools to keep these corporations from becoming, monopolies however they refuse to use them, as every time they side with the corporations. They make some piddly ass adjustments that mean absolutely nothing to these corporate monopolies. When you have all these corporate giants telling the government what to do and how to do it, then you no longer have a democracy, you have fascism. We are near that situation today, however if the people wake up and smell the roses we can stop this slide into fascism.
John	V	ON	When I travel out of Canada I cannot afford to use my cell phone, the roaming charges are astronomical and I have just been informed by Bell will increase. For many trips I have used a British phone SIM card which allows me to text from around the world for cents. There is no excuse for the behaviour of the Canadian telecom companies, it is a simple matter of greed allowed by and essential monopoly based on cooperation between the three big telecoms. This needs to end.
Sylvain	Z	QC	I cannot complain about Bell's services. Things have most of the time run smoothly. But that might be the case with other, smaller, companies if they had the chance to compete. What I hate about how Bell is doing business: they hook you in with a "deal" and, once you are onboard, they increase their price several times per year! I mean, I can understand adjusting your price once a year to reflect the impact of inflation (and not more!) but this is ridiculous. Several years ago, I was connected to the Internet with an independent provider and their prices were stable year after year.
Derek Gordon	S M	ON ON	Do you remember the good old days when you could put your money in the bank and earn interest on it? Before the invention of the computer banking must have been a highly laborious institution to run. Everything had to be calculated by hand with pen & paper. Nowadays all that work is done instantly by computer without human intervention, yet amazingly instead of interest we have to pay the bank services charges! I noticed one day when I logged into my online banking that my small business account was showing balance not available. I thought this was strange. When I tried to view details I was told that this account had gone dormant due to lack of activity and I would have access to my information next time I made a transaction. The monthly service charge on this account is fairly steep so I thought that they were doing me a favor since I wasn't using the account they stopped the fees and I guess it's only fair I would not have access to my balance etc. When tax season rolled around I decided it might be nice to have a look into that account. I dumped money from paypal into it and imagine my dismay when I discovered that CIBC had continued to charge me a $6 account fee and $9.5 loan admin fee for the overdraft feature I wasn't using during the period of time I had no access to my account information. Does it seem fair to you to pay the bank a fee to maintain an account I cannot even access my balance or view my transactions on? I couldn't even see the service charge transactions they were making! I called the bank to complain and they would do nothing about it. In Canada the banks are always at the top of the list of most profitable corporations, yet they still get the same preferred tax rate as family run convenience stores and farms operating on a razor thin profit margin. Do you think it's fair that banks are allowed to profit while the rest of us break our backs and they still pay only a fraction of the tax that many of us have to pay?
Sandra	E	ON	The lack of competition in the markets served by these companies creates bureaucratic response together with mediocre quality. I am fed up with large billion dollars companies buying up little companies and then over charging us for our landlines, television, internet, security systems and our cell phones. Enough is enough. Time for them to lower the prices to more realistic levels.
Chandra	B	ON	Rogers: - My family has been ripped off by you for many years until we cancelled. They used their "cheap tricks" to have us stay (e.g will offer you this for that service, or X amount of $$ off for the next 6 months, etc., etc. Stop your monopolistic power & let healthy competition occur for the benefit for all of us, and not just over-relying over your power outages. - Also please stop the price gouging an enough of small dirty tricks. ALL Canadians deserve bill clarity and fixed costs, not ever-increasing costs for things they are not using or do not need.  Loblaws - Please stop selling chicken for $30 when the same thing can be found for $14 everywhere else. Chicken is chicken & Canadians have the right to buy food for themselves and (hopefully) mitigate the reliance on food banks from poorer people. I'll just give you some of my observations. 1. Loblaws - a) half a cantaloupe $6.00; Metro - half a cantaloupe $3.49 and $3.99. b) products on sale BUT ONLY if you buy two items. This is a problem for anyone who is single. Gouging? Yes!  2. Bell - letter I received from Bruce Telecom Internet and phone provider  "Currently your Bruce Telecom services are provided using leased loop infrastructure from Bell Canada. The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunication Commission (CRTC) Decision 2018-200 has unregulated this service and Bell has announced that effective April 6, 2022, the cost for this service will increase over 100%. We regret to inform you that as a result, effective February 28, 2023 Bruce Telecom will no longer be offering service to your address."  This is how Bell is SMOTHERING COMPETITION, gouging customers and affecting people's budgets.  4. Bell - re Bruce Telecom I wanted to call Bell to see about getting a home phone as Bruce Telecom advised. I called four times and the call was dropped each time after waiting a good 20 to 30 minutes. Only on the fifth did a person answer. Why does it take five calls to make contact? Because they don't have to answer.  3. Rogers - I have waited today over 3 hours to speak to a representative about a phone plan. Why are there not enough agents to deal with customers? BECAUSE THEY DON'T HAVE TO ANSWER! The alternative is only Bell (see above) and a few sub-providers that have not been bought out already.  Bell and Rogers do not respect their customers' time nor do they appreciate the frustration that they create. I used to be against foreign companies entering the Canadian market. Not so much now.
Hilde	R	ON	Canada is full of monopolies, from the maple industry, the telecommunications industry (cellphones and cable tv), the housing market, grocery stores, fuel stations, ... the list goes on. A young family in Canada not only faces the highest internet charges in all the world, but also some of the highest housing costs in the world. What's left at the end of the day? What future is there in Canada for us? They tell us it's supposed to help stop Canadian companies from being bought out by Americans but all it does is let the Canadian companies rip off Canadians. Our family doesn't even pay for cable anymore, too expensive. Everything is too expensive, and I have a sneaking suspicion part of it is because of all the monopolies everywhere you turn. The game is rigged. And we all know it.

			As someone who has worked my entire life as a single, sole-supporting mom, I am now relegated to being a disabled senior through no fault of my own. I find it abhorrent that these monopolies continue to garner obscene profits and premeditatedly have eroded our free market place for their own gain. Government works for the public, they are our employees, yet I am appalled at the free pass these corporatists are given by our "employees". I use Shaw internet (no t.v. or any extras, just internet) and am forced to remain with them as they continuously increase their costs because I have no better option available to me. They bill 2 months in advance and send emails and phone calls demanding payment. I refuse to pay 2 months in advance for something that I have not yet used! Their voice mails say they do not offer payment extensions, for a service that has not been used yet. They do not offer existing customers a rate plan either, only new customers. I am furious!
Laurie	A	BC	Now food corporatists are also squeezing us! Do I pay my outrageous internet bill or do I buy over-priced food?? The comment of J.F.K. always come to my mind now. "Those who make peaceful revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable." What are our choices when our backs are forced up against a wall??
Autumn	H	BC	Again and again I see how competition in other countries drives prices down and increases competition, compared to Canada where prices are high and service is poor. This is the result of distinctional regulation. I see it in my banking, my groceries, my airlines, even my veterinarians! I don't see a future for my family with prices soaring and wages stagnant.
Jessica	A	AB	My car was out of fuel, I went to Costco to fuel up and the debit machines did I not work as Rogers network was down. It was -20 degrees and I had my children with me. The next fuel station was 15 km away. It was a very stressful 10 minutes as didn't know of my vehicle would make it and we would have to push my car or call a tow truck.
James	M	ON	We simply don't have competition in Canada. Whether you shop at any of the big three grocery stores your still going to get fleeced. Same with whether you choose Rogers or Bell. The Trudeau Govt. seems captive to these people at the expense of the Canadian citizen.
Lynda	H	ON	All of us were harmed by Loblaws when they overcharged on necessary items like bread. I have been personally harmed by the big tech companies by them overcharging me for years with lousy customer service. My mother is a victim too. Rogers decided to cheap out on installing ignite in her building. They did it wrong. My mother had to call Rogers THREE times for them to get it right! She was out of service for 4 days. No compensation given!

Yurek	K	ON	Monopolies eliminate competition. Look at countries like Israel which deregulated their telecom companies and allowed competition. The price of 5G cellular service fell to $3 for close to 200 Gb of data. Just don't tell me to move to Israel.

			Mega corporations , can make money but competition is never a bad thing either ...
			I am a senior citizen and am on a fixed income. Because of government policies, competition has diminished over the years until most of our necessities are controlled by a few large corporations. Without competition these corporations are free to increase prices without fear of losing market share. These monopolies control grocery stores, internet and telephone services, and many other necessities. Food banks are overwhelmed by increasing demand. My family has been fortunate so far but many of our friends and neighbours are not as fortunate. The government has got to stop favouring large corporations over people. Stop allowing mergers whenever a corporation asks for one.
Garry	H	ON	The High Phone and internet prices are a result of the governments inaction to STOP monopolies like Shaw, Rogers, Bell; & Telus. The competition Bureau watchdog is headed by a FORMER Exective from Telus' Talik about putting the FOX in charge of guarding the Henhouse. I have worked overseas in Malaysia, & Yemen and purchased a cellphone and long distance package and data package that was less than one quarter of the cost here in Canada. In Fact foR 438.00 Cdn /mo. I was able to call home from Yemen DAILY and never ran out of minutes. If my wife wanted to call me from Canada, she would call and the hang up after two rings , so I would call her back as the costa from Canad was so high! These prices in Canada are totally out of line and we are being RIPPED OFF!
David	K	AB	Prices keep going up, especially food. Consumers have very few choices left other than pay the price or not eat. Please help break up the monopolies of big corporations or else we will elect a new government who will help the people.
Marlon	L	ON	It's time to stop preventing competition in Canada! Stop allowing for the creation of massive Monopolies! We are being held hostage by these monsters! As Canadians we do not have choices for so many of our products and services and this systematic protection has led to the continuing creation of larger and larger monopolies as well as new monopolies. Our governments are part of these corporations and have helped to build them using tax payer dollars in a variety of ways. Wrong, wrong, wrong! Tear them into smaller units and disconnect the monopoly ownership.
Don	R	ON	most canadians don't bother pushing back against big tech until its too late,when i was living in northern ontario which was until last year, where i was living we had no choice but to deal with big tel.and our internt alone was over 100.00 and it was only 25mb download if you we're lucky,most of the we couln't stream a movie,we could not use rogers or bell as we had no reception and both services we're very expensive,this has to stop,people must wake up and stop these big companies because we will lose alot more than just tele and internet mike	g	ON	I am tried of paying bills for internet. Like insurance it keeps going up so big bonus can be paid to CEO. We need action now to lower insurance rates, cost at the store, lower internet. We need more competition to have more choices and lower our rates.

Alice	A	ON	We also need to stop the buy up of housing by profiteering, by big time investors, real estate that purchase and rent at extremely high costs.
Miriam	D	ON	Way to many things wrong with weak government that fails the people who pay their wages.
			My grocery bills have gone up 30-40%. Forget going to concerts, I'm trying to pay for food, gas and lodging. I don't understand how major corporations are being allowed to run up costs and make record breaking revenues while publicly stating g that they are just trying to keep up with inflation.
Frank	S	BC	Completion is good for all citizens and business Monopolies are only good for the politically CC connected I say this even if I have shares in loblaws
			We used to enact laws to prevent monopolies and protect the consumers. Now the with all the corporate mergers the word monopoly takes on a new form. Especially when the consumer is or has become dependent on the services/products.
			It is well know that these companies make a large profit margin and this appears to be their motive(s) to buy /merge with other companies.
			Living in BC it is my understanding that we have some of the highest cellular fees in the world.
			Telus was my internet provider until they wanted to increase the rate from $60/month to $90/month. A local company got my business at just $40.21/month.
			Funny thing is they use a Shaw cable service to piggyback the connection and I dropped Shaw years back for the same reason above, unreasonable rate jumps.
Guy	M	BC	So lets find a happy medium and it appears the politicians are in line to help make this happen . Do the right thing. Thanks
Jason	M	BC	Competition and free market enterprise foster and reward innovation, benefitting all. Monopolies foster inertia and reward greed, benefitting few.

			In the last 2 years - without any significant product deviation due to dietary needs - my grocery bill has nearly doubled at Loblaw's grocery stores. I'm forced to pay nearly $90/month for a basic phone + data package, on a phone I own outright, and I'm locked into a surplus of data that I simply never use - the lowest tier - because I work from home (this pricing is no different for any company amongst the hydra that is RoBell.us). Gas prices are constantly in flux due to the machinations of a council of wealthy countries and corporations (OPEC) who arbitrarily decide how to bill for it - which hits particularly hard in a country as large and as cold as Canada. Ticketmaster infamously tacked on costs to a recent tour from Robert Smith (of The Cure fame) that ended up costing more than the tickets themselves. This is to say nothing of the exorbitant and repugnant "platinum" pricing model they've introduced that algorithmically inflates the price of tickets when a concert/event is deemed to be "popular": hence the recent spat with Taylor Swift - among many other top level performing artists - where prices were artificially increased to thousands of dollars for a single ticket. Real Estate in Canada is opaque and treated like a day-traded stock or commodity rather than shelter for Canadian residents and citizens: the average cost of a rental unit has surged to more than the average person's monthly budget can afford, and average house prices have increased to become inaccessible for most of the Millennial and Gen Z generations unless they inherit generational wealth. The monopoly and oligopoly stranglehold on our country (and modern society as a whole) is only beneficial to the politicians and the corporations to whom they are beholden. Let's also not forget about Doug Ford's dismantling of the Ontario medical system through drastic under-funding [$21B] and wage suppression, and his attempts to force through the 413 highway development of the Greenbelt so that the adjacent land developers and land owners [i.e.: his corporate donors, and the financial backers through his daughter's highly-suspicious wedding fundraiser] will benefit. We need more regulations in place to prevent this greed from completing the task it has so successfully executed thus far over the last four decades: corrupting our society, hollowing out the middle class, and siphoning our economy's wealth to the 1% with complete disregard for the environmental, economic, and societal consequences. Compounding all of this: our planet is literally on fire because of these actors around the world: temperatures are increasing, inclement weather is becoming more severe and more frequent, wildlife is dying off at an unsustainable rate, and the world's fresh water resources are becoming scarce. Over 90 trillion tons of CO2 were emitted into the atmosphere, alongside nearly 27 million tons of plastic waste being dumped into our oceans THIS PAST YEAR ALONE. We have less than 26 years until the oceans contain more plastic than fish, and less than 17 years until the world runs out of freshwater unless water use is drastically reduced (of which over 80% is consumed through industrial applications). As of 2022, humans have consumed nearly 30% of all available resources on this planet, and over 22% of all species are currently at critical risk of extinction. Late Stage Capitalism is destroying our planet, and it does seem like anyone with the legitimate power to affect change is doing anything significant about it. I'm not suggesting that violence is the answer - but, history rhymes: it repeats itself in odd and interesting ways. In times of great strife, revolution is inevitable. Multiple generations in contemporary society have been readily raised on fictional stories of scrappy rebellious groups overthrowing tyrannical villains and empires. The French invented the guillotine for a reason during the French Revolution: to remove the aristocracy and redistribute the wealth. Perhaps, in our modern era of sequels and reboots, it is only a matter of time before it makes a notable cameo appearance.
Ryan	P	ON	Monopolies lead to higher prices and worse service.
Caitlin	H	ON	Democracy means everyone's human rights are protected. Monopolies do not support democracy. I am concerned that monopolies are now running our governments which can only end badly. Let's get back on track and depose these monopolies with a stronger democracy such as proportional representation voting system.
Rose	W	BC	I got ripped off on the amount of data I used. $40 was added to my bill. Your supposed to be able to monitor your usage but if you look at the fine print Telus states that there usage info is not accurate. What good is that? They make themselves look good by supplying the data but it's not reliable. I had their hub unplugged but it still showed usage!!!!
Louis	V	BC	When monopolies are allowed to form and operate then the people become less free and their dollar buys less. That's a problem that makes a lot of things worse for people who are not a part of the elite wealthy class. This means most people get worse quality of life and fewer options available to them. In Canada, prices for services such as Internet, TV, and Cell Phones are among the highest in the world. This needs to change ASAP!
			It may be difficult for some to understand how things were allowed to get this bad. There are too many cases where those who are supposed protect us, are in fact the very ones that are making these things happen because they have become compromised (i.e., foxes guarding the hen house).
Ernest	T	ON	The power is with the people when they are together working towards a common goal. Put down the TV remote, get off the sofa and get together to make a change. No one else will save you, we must save ourselves.
Elizabeth	K	ON	Large Companies getting larger, harmful for us all! They influence decision making in our government for their own profits by strong lobbying, eventually controlling our democratically elected Government!!!!
			Simply put these companies control the market. They are too big to fail because they know that they can count on the spineless government (a.k.a. the common taxpayer) to bail them out of whatever stupid business decisions they make. Yes Air Canada (et.al.) leadership, I am talking to you. Monopolies are bad for economic growth. Bad for innovation, competition, and do not foster cultural growth of the markets they serve. Government must set rules to FORCE monopolies to place people, customers, environment before profits and products. The Legal definition of a corporation being akin to that of a person needs to change! Corporations don't have feelings.
Paul	C	ON	My bad personal experience with Bell is hardly worth mentioning: you'll see thousands of similar complaints from Canadians. The real issue is our system that encourages national monopoly through acquisition, and actual monopoly in particular regions. That policy not only has us paying higher prices but makes Internet access and healthy diet unaffordable for low-income Canadians; it has also severely constrained access to trustworthy news and analysis which would inform us that the federal government can and must act to correct the abusive practices of too-powerful corporate lobbies.
Judyth	M	QC	Surely now is the time to act for the public good and tell these corporations they do not have an unlimited licence to exploit Canadians to maximize profits.
			It isn't just a case of big tech abusing consumers via monopolistic positions, it's a combination of the lack of actual constraints in an antiquated competition act, the number of conflicted lobbyists & watchdog board members who were either former government or industry insiders. This is true across all levels of government responsible for oversight of the various business sectors including: energy, such as the Ontario Energy Board whose members fit that insider description to a tee, the CRTC & other agencies whose decisions are either inherently biased or limited by their mandates & ability to protect consumers.
Gordon	S	ON	Monopolies are an overall detriment to society as they create vendor lock-in (you can't switch without losing data or features), there is little innovation (no incentive for folks who already have your business, small companies often can't compete) and the market stops fairly setting prices because the supply side is under such limited control. Multiple companies (in a non-monopoly competitive setting) also release the need for bureaucratic government regulations as the companies are forced to compete with each other for better goods and services as opposed to fighting with the public.
Ryan	W	ON	I pay an outrageous amount for my Telus internet. Over $100 a month. I have to continually reset my very old modem because it just stops working. It is a discontinued plan that I can barely watch a small video without buffering or look at several websites at once. It is not that easy to change as they all offer "super" plans at ridiculous prices that single, non-gaming person would never use. No options for a reasonable speed for one person. Any offers worth their merit are family plans. Research takes hours and I need to spend my time now scouting grocery ads because I need to eat. Besides that it takes an incredible amount of time to notify all my email recipients that I have moved my email. Truth be told, I will have to move now as it is just too much for what I get. Effectively, dial up.
Laurie	K	BC	It's been apparent for years (decades?) that there is no competition amongst the big three telecoms. Their pricing and offerings are aligned, so there is no choice for consumers. Worse still, they create the illusion of choice with their myriad of flanker brands. Consequently, we are forced to pay significantly higher costs, relative to most developed countries, for essential telecom services. All Canadians are subject to the pricing whims of our telecom oligopoly due to outdated competition legislation and lax government oversight/enforcement.
Jean-Marc	L	ON	Bell has given us TERRIBLE service over the years, but without any competition, why should they strive to be better? My wireless connection is so bad that during the pandemic I was forced to teach my students on my husband's computer (he has a hard line into the router). So we asked Bell to improve the service. Their tech showed up but couldn't even figure out how to boost the signal...and then Bell charged us for the 'pods' that the tech couldn't even install. Took us 2-3 months and at least 3 different phone calls to convince Bell that we hadn't gotten the 'pods' and should not have been charged for them! And don't get me started on how many times they called us in the following months, pushing their TV services! If you can't even handle my internet and/or phone properly, why should I take even MORE services with you? Having to compete with other, better telcos can only improve Bell's commitment to its customers.
Bonnie	S	QC	Every few months I contact Bell in an effort to reduce our monthly fees. This often works in that the next bill or two are reduced due to special offers or reduced services. However the monthly bill continues to climb over the next few months until it is again greater than six months ago... with no additional services or publicly announced increases I might add.
Philip	H	NS	It is clear that there is not enough competition to keep Bell pricing within reasonable limits.

[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	What I hate the most about monopolies is monopolies is - just that. The companys' monopoly is growing larger than never before and while us consumers freedom to choose for affordable, reliable company services is growing smaller than ever. This is why my government. I demand you to revise your non-existent fair competition act for the sake of us YOUR people and the companies OWN consumers. So that consumers will have more freedom for their livelihood.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	After years and years of price hikes to our Rogers services, we left to join an independent service provider and chose Start.ca. In recent years, the rules that govern independent access to high speed internet have made it nearly impossible for the little guy to offer competitive rates and our once good deal has dwindled out of sight. And now, our little guy (Start.ca) was bought by Telus, and the independent options continue to get smaller
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	I was a long time Fido(Rogers) customer, I left to get a better deal. Within weeks of leaving, Fido called offering an almost 30% decrease of my new deal to come back but with no long term price protection. Then my new service with no notice upped their rates 10%. All just cashing in on consumers who have no legitimate options.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Canada needs more competition not less. Almost every independent provider of telecommunications in Canada has been bought out by one of the big three Telecom companies. There is a similar concentration of power in the food business and the entertainment business. The Canadian government needs to open the doors in a regulated way to foreign telecom providers since all that happens to Canadian independents is that they get swallowed up by one of the big three. Over many years, I have faced increasing costs for cellular and televisions, internet and land line services. Almost every year my bills would increase with no discernible increase in service or value. And, if I approached these companies indicating that a competitor happened to have a better price, I would suddenly be offered a better deal for my services. Why should I have to threaten to leave a company to be treated as a valued customer and not a cash cow. The Federal Government needs to wake up and open the door to foreign competition and to block the Rogers / Shaw deal which is ultimately in the best interest of shareholders and not consumers. Minister Champagne, stop listening to lobbyist who are being paid to sell you a bill of goods, listen to the public who you were elected to represent. Thank you.

And the prices are atrocious - it's not good that these companies are able to line the pockets of the rich shareholders while stealing money from the shrinking middle-class. Ridiculous. Competition keeps everyone on their toes, increases quality of service because there are alternatives, and keeps pricing a little more honest. What's not to love about competition???

[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	There needs to be the right amount of regulation to ensure that the interests of all Canadians are looked after. Too little regulation leads to the law of the jungle, including the development of monopolies as bigger companies gobble up the smaller ones, leading to a reduction in competition. Too much regulation and there is a disincentive for innovation and improvement, which can also entrench monopolies.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Our government must stop monopolies gouging ordinary Canadians. These monopolies and their CEO's made record profits and salaries while ordinary Canadians struggling to make ends meet.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Commercial competition is a complex issue. It does not have a 'one size fits all solution'. In areas of commerce where the end use customer is qualified to discern quality level and compare prices, it is beneficial. In those where public safety is involved, a very strictly government regulated monopoly may be in the public interest, provided that the actual administration of the programme is completely independent of political influence. For example, the British government DELIBERATELY set up licence controlled monopolies with the 1930 Road Traffic Act and the 1933 Road and Rail Traffic Act to overcome deficiencies in vehicle maintenance caused by competitive pressure; when the Thatcher government privatized the railway system there were a spate of railway accidents due to inadequate maintenance. Another factor that affects the issue is that, in addition to price considerations, monopolies tend to limit customer options in terms of service provided ( always pushing their latest package whether or not the customer needs it).
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	There's no competitive choices and everyone does the same thing, and use loopholes to prevent newcomers from entering the market.

[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Don't even get me started on Loblaw. Ask anyone on their supply chain what it's like to deal with them. 99/100 will tell you they're a criminal enterprise. And that's just how they manipulate their suppliers regardless if it's legal or not. The nerve of that Weston guy to sit on his multiple billion dollar high chair and say their profits aren't criminal when they act and operate like a criminal organization is rich. Funny how Canadas richest families are there off the backs of Canadians? Rogers? Weston's? Wake up. Both tell com and grocery should be basic necessities and two families are richer than ever. [Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	BC	We need to put an end to the large monopolies exploitation of consumers in Canada. The Competition Bureau was established to do this, but either has been complacent in its duty to do so or has been bought off, because the number of business's controlling key necessities keeps contracting. For example I live in a community that once gave us a choice of 3 ISPs - competition between them kept pricing reasonable. Unfortunately one of the big 3 came in and bought out the competition and tore out all the infrastructure and put in there own infrastructure and since then my cost of internet has doubled and if I ever have an issue that requires an onsite take it is a month wait, because they know you have no other choice. The other side of the equation is that with the local ISPs we once had most of the money stayed in our community and provided jobs, now with the one ISP there is 1 full time employee in the community and virtually no spinoff.

"Small" companies like Fido or Virgin are owned by Rogers and Bell. Going to a budget grocery store? Nope, they are actually owned by giants like Metro and Loblaw. We have the illusion of choice, and because of it companies can raise prices under the guise of inflation, when really it's to inflate profits. Worse, these companies are keeping lock step with each other in terms of price. Go to any cell providers site and all plans are the same price. You can get a $55 plan, an $85 plan, or an expensive $105 plan. It's the same for internet. Oh, and if you want to go with a 3rd party provider? You'll be treated like a second class citizen on the network, and still have to pay for the privilege. Because they have all the market share and bully or buy up any competition, they have no need to innovate and improve things. Canada has some of the slowest and most expensive internet access in the developed world. That is just fact. Sure, people in major cities are getting fibre, but the rest of us? No because it isn't profitable. Our cell phone costs are some of the highest in the world too. And we get very little for it. And our government does nothing about it. [Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	BC	I hate the telecom corporations. They set the prices high. When you complain, they sometimes take a tiny bit off. One time, I told the rep I would change servers, and he jeered at me. "They charge the same as we do." (True.) [Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	BC	One time, I was told that I paid higher fees so they could afford to extend high speed internet to rural areas of the province. Will there be a price rollback when they've added thousands of new high speed customers?

[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	AB	It isn't just these companies, but also the likes companies that make products that are considered specialty products like lactose-free and gluten-free products where we see the costs of products being at least $2 to $3 higher per product than the standard product of the same size if you can even purchase the same size of product. A good example is Dairyland who recently decided to decrease the size of their 2 litre lactose free milk jugs to 1.89 litres and increase the cost of the cartons by a minimum of 80 cents per litre. When I contacted them they said that it was quality control, cost to produce and the cost of shipping. Well, guess what - the retailer already passes the cost of shipping on to us! We were already paying the extra cost for processing before the cost increase and we weren't looking for a better quality product - it was already what we wanted - you downsized it because you were looking for higher profits and for us to buy your product more frequently! Instead of boosting the costs for regular product lines they boosted it for creamer, chocolate milk and the lactose-free line! Well, the same is true with other companies like Telus who have year-on-year raised the prices of their Television and telephone costs. Grocery stores are forever increasing the prices of meats, cutting back on portions and making it more difficult to survive on a wage that is below the poverty level! How are we supposed to survive? It's shameful the way big communications and food monopolies have been (and continue to be) taking advantage of all Canadians, despite their non-compliance with the laws (which apparently try to manipulate, at times) and with the conformity of the so called overseeing government bodies responsible for monitoring compliance. The enormous over-expenditures caused by the lax attitude of these government bodies can never be accurately estimated.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	QC	The law is on the consumer's side, you have been, and still are, as far as I know, in charge of insuring its compliance, so do what you are being paid to do and stop being just an instrument of the big monopolies! [Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	SK	Monopolies are bad for everyone including the companies that push to monopolize. We need a diverse healthy competitive market to create jobs, provide quality services and products along with fair pricing. [Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	AB	I don't think having monopolies is right as it makes us Canadians pay way more for so many things and at times for way less services or products than other countries. For example, our cell bills are always higher for way less services which is so incredibly ridiculous! Please stop companies from bleeding our bank accounts dry.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	AB	Dear MPs! By encouraging monopolies and by reducing the competition between grocery or data suppliers, you are NOT serving Canadians, you are in the pocket of the giant companies! No wonder for example data is 1000 times more expensive in Canada than in Finland. Let fair competition in in our country!
			I presently have Rogers high speed internet, home phone and TV. I signed up a number of years ago under a telephone promotion at an agreed price of $99/month. After the year promotion it jumped up to $190 /month. I have to call up Rogers and threaten to leave them in order to have them lower the price to something that is more reasonable (presently at $135/month). Every year I must go through this process, and it requires 3 or more calls to Rogers, 2 hrs for each call (min 6 hrs in total) that I must spend "negotiating" a fair price. After getting an agreement, Rogers ALWAYS changes something to their advantage.
			- Once it was dropping the long distance plan and I was subject to excessive charges that required me to call again and threaten to file a complaint with the CNSC in order to get what was agreed to.
			- The next year Rogers dropped the Sports package, requiring me to call back and pay an additional $20 more to get it back.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	I for one am tired of this annual dance with the Monopolies to get a fair deal. This is what the CRTC is here to do for us Canadian, and they are failing us miserably.

			Customer service at monopolies are non existent when it comes to billing or inquiries. Many years ago I accepted a two year deal(offered by phone)for internet, home phone and telephone from Bell. I recorded the call as well as making notes as to what was said and the questions I asked as well as the responses to those questions. To make a long story short. The all in price was not to change for 2 years. That was established during the call numerous times. Within 3 months I received notification that the price would be going up. After numerous calls and hours waiting on the phone over many weeks. Promises to get a call back that never occurred. Numerous escalations to non available management that actually had the authority or were empowered to make changes or calls. The issue was resolved. I have had similar issues with Roger's. I now try the best I can to subscribe to independent providers. As I get far better service and better prices. However as the CRTC continues to cater to large monopolies, independent provides are disappearing. Break up the monopolies now. Canadians deserve much better.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Prices of internet /cable services keep rising. The rising prices are becoming unsustainable. It won't be long before we start paying $500 for service bundles. This is ridiculous and something needs to be done to reign in the ever increasing price rises by Big Telecom. A price ceiling limit or more flexible, variable packages need to be considered.
			Either allow more competition or give the CRTC more power to reorganize Big Tech's monopolistic $ power grab and give the power back to the consumer.
			It is understood that Canada is a country of vast expanse and that most of the network has been built by the Big Two -- Rogers and Bell.
			Still, this is no excuse for not attempting to come up with legislation that would allow more flexibility for Canadians across the board, so to speak, to gain greater access to choices for their own benefit.
			In these difficult economic times for many -- these are the people that are hurt the most by the price increases year by year (actually more like month by month!). My family and I remember when we started out paying the lowest cable/internet prices package prices and slowly but surely, the cost began to escalate not too noticeably at first and we felt we could do nothing about it.
			Perhaps it may not be a bothersome problem for the wealthy citizens of this country, but for the rest of the majority of Canadians, it tells a different story a d one that is becoming more and more annoyingly unsatisfactory.
			This also goes for the food price increases which sees many paying nearly double for this groceries! This scenario too is becoming all the more incredulous as we are ourselves victims of this food price escalation.
			This cannot simply go on and on until we'll be paying $12 for a package of lettuce (yes, $14 at one point!).
			It's so easy for those with plenty of $ to shrug off these problems but for the majority of Canadians, and this includes people who have retired comfortably (not wealthy!) and anyone else struggling with a maze of ever increasing, worrisome and frustrating food, telecom services, and etcetera that comes in between.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Enough Canada! Time to wake up!
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	BC	Monopolies do what they want, charge what they want. Bring in foreign competition and tighter rules.
			Capitalism is an unsustainable business model built on involuntary slavery that only serves to increase the wealth of those with capital. This neo-feudalistic society will eventually lead to drastic action once the poor start dying regularly in publicly visible areas and the middle class struggle to afford food. I highly recommend that all of society come together to dream up a solution that ensures all humans are able to meet their minimum living needs before anyone is allowed second helpings from the buffet table.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	BC	Lack of competition, and price fixing among those who hold the monopoly, drives up cost. The priority of these companies hold is their profits and their shareholders.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Lack of competition in many sectors of the Canadian economy is allowing the companies doing business in those sectors to behave like monopolies. The Big Three (Bell, Rogers, and Telus) in the telecom arena do not compete hard against one another, because they know that the route to outsized profits is higher prices. The Big Three (Loblaws, Metro and Sobeys) in the grocery sector have been ringing up record profits even as the public struggles with affordability.
			When companies in these situations issue normal-course issuer bids to repurchase and cancel shares, they are demonstrating that they have more money than they know what to do with: they see more advantage in pumping up share prices by reducing the number of shares outstanding than in actually investing in their business. Similarly, increasing dividends indicates that paying shareholders more is preferable to investing in the business. And the customers of these companies pay unnecessarily high prices for goods and services as a result.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	It's time for the Government of Canada to recognize and respond to this situation. Foster real competition. Implement a tax measure that provides a disincentive to normal-course issuer bids.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	I canceled Rogers Cable and will never get it again. Terrible service when I moved, and the so called Basic Cable went way up in price!
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Internet is a necessity nowadays but is way too expensive for people on fixed income. The government needs to do something about these high prices, stop big corporations from buying up small companies.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	High prices means I always have to look for deals when grocery shopping, spending hours trying to get retention deals with phone providers. I don't understand why these are things we have to do to make things barely affordable.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	I can't trust that the prices are fair. After bread price fixing and wage fixing there isn't trust. I don't know what happens when trust erodes but I don't think it will be stable democracies and that worries me.
			Monopolistic practises, like those used by "Big Telecom" companies (for example), end up giving consumers little to no choice, poor service, higher prices, no competition (competition can lead to lower prices with improved products and/or services), and can eventually lead to these same corporations having "undue influence" on our political systems and Government!! When corporations get too large and powerful, they often eliminate competition and increase prices in a never ending drive for higher and higher profits, while at the same time not improving service and at times even reducing service. The consumer is the one who suffers, and the consumer is also the taxpayer, and the voter. The Government is supposed to "work for the people/voters", not Corporations! It is past time that the Government start "doing right" by voters.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	BC	The fact that Canada has some of the highest prices for cell phone and internet service is well established. The grocery chains have been convicted for price fixing and their subsidiary suppliers often fill store space with imported produce, even when local fruits and vegetables are in season.
			In Thunder Bay, Ticketmaster has taken over the marketing of music at the Community Auditorium, making access to symphony concerts less convenient and more expensive. Other acts have become even more costly, and they sometimes deal only in foreign (US) currency. I'm far from being the only person to forgo entertainment I regularly enjoyed in the past.
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Canadians pay some of the highest prices in the world, for subpar internet, cellular, and cable tv services. This is due to the monopoly and lack of competition in this country for these services for regular daily living. This issue also includes Loblaws and grocery prices. The end result is that these companies hold Canadians hostage with their high prices, and not very many other choices available. Canadians pay an extraordinarily high proportion of their income, just on regular living expenses, compared to other first world nations. Over the last year prices for food and fuel have risen for no reason other than profiteering. The government needs to take back control over monopolies and oligopolies in Canada. Stop letting them write regulations. Stop the revolving door for regulators.
			Where to start, on the monopolies... Policies favouring them caused the greatest transfer of wealth into corporate control in human history. Thereby destroying large numbers of small businesses, including my own. I'm in a rural area where small convenience grocers, as one example, save time and money for a few cents extra per product. And people socialize. Loblaw's is known for fixing bread prices; they also seem to be largely controlling availability of many products, and price gouging on those... My internet service for years was insanely expensive for service as slow as dialup, really... and often off completely. Snow in the dish! Yes, it's rural... Now I have a better deal for another year with highspeed and 50 gigs, which is plenty, but now they are bringing 5G here to the outback, which is an insult to all I hold dear and Holy. Given that it's completely untested on wildlife, for example, and I've read of massive bird dieoffs where it's being introduced. I did not move to the wilderness to be blasted, and seem to have no choice. That is infuriating. And, of course, the marketing is all SAFE AND EFFECTIVE all over again...

Big company buys rights to broadcast the program and it becomes blocked on YouTube. The only alternative is to buy the TV package that has a lot of channels I will never need to watch. I understand that I need to pay for the content. But I am totally not happy with how it is organized. Even if I wanted to buy a tv bundle - I do not know which one to choose because it is not advertised exactly which channel will have programming that I need. What am I supposed to do with that?
[Privacy Redaction]	[Privacy Redaction]	ON	Currently our telecoms are allowed to strangle their competition until they're in dire straits. Then they're allowed to buy them up & pretend they're still a separate company from the incumbent providers. Corporate mergers are all in the purpose of forming oligopolies and then monopolies for the express purpose of capturing the entire market. All mergers should be illegal. No company should be allowed to set prices for its competition for leasing sections of its services. This is a direct conflict of interest. A third party should be setting those prices to maintain fairness. Spectrum for telecoms should be handed out in equivalent amounts to all companies requiring it, not auctioned, which only promotes the wealthy.
			Our grocery stores in Canada are owned by one or two parent companies. This should not happen. It's purely a financial drain on the public. Aside from being inefficient, it lies to the public about there being ANY competition in the grocery store market. They can tantamount price fix to a similar degree without consequence. All grocery store food retail sales should be made nonprofit.
			The UK opened up their wireless market to MVNO's & their prices dropped like a rock. There's so much competition, even from international telecoms, that they get much better quantities of data for less money than here. The government needs to force the acceptance of other telecom providers in Canada. We've waited more than a decade for this to happen & it should never take this long to take place.
			The competition bureau must have the power to investigate anything they need to in determining anticompetitive behavior & the power to fine & restrict a company's activities. They should have the power to split companies up. The bottom line is that the government should have power & authority over all companies.

THE ANTI-MONOPOLY CHARTER

Monopolies are taking over Canada.

- The growing monopoly power of many companies is deepening Canada's cost of living crisis and breaking our economy — and our laws are too weak to stop it.
- Extremely uncompetitive markets like in telecom, groceries, and online marketplaces ensure monopolies get away with jacking up prices, stealing and selling our sensitive personal data, and crushing new and independent businesses.
- They don't just benefit from these unfair systems — they build them. Monopolies bully regulators and policymakers into policies and practices that favour their large corporate interests over ordinary people.

Our laws should protect us, not corporate giants.

- Rather than stand up to monopolies, today's complicated, and ineffective legislation — AKA our Competition Act — has helped the giants consolidate power.
- In Canada, monopolies wield a legal trump card: Section 96, the "efficiencies defense" that greenlights every competition-killing buyout and merger. It must be entirely removed from the Act.
- The Act's primary objective should be to fight the growing problem of monopolies in Canada. It should explicitly exist to detect and break up monopolies today, and prevent future monopolies.
- The Act should also make it possible for the Competition Bureau to consider worker harms — like cutting decent jobs and setting unlivable wages — as negative outcomes to prevent.

Monopolies should be BLOCKED from getting any bigger.

- The Competition Act should set bright line rules to stop already-dominant companies in the market from buying other companies, with particularly tight restrictions on telecom monopolies.
- The Act should put the burden of proof on the giants to demonstrate why their merger won't hurt competition, rather than the other way around.
- Everyday people deserve a voice when giants try to merge. Public transparency is critical, and regular Canadians deserve to participate in meaningful ways.
- The Competition Bureau should be allowed to re-evaluate a merger or buyout at any time, even if it's already happened.

We need real ways to hold giant companies accountable.

- Today, monopolies in Canada hold all the cards and answer to no one. That cannot continue.

- The Competition Bureau can't be weaker than the monopolies it's meant to regulate. At minimum, the Act should give the Bureau the same robust investigative and enforcement powers as other agencies of its kind globally.
- The Competition Bureau must have the power to proactively study our markets to root out — and swiftly deal with — creeping monopolies it finds.
- Monopolies abusing their power to hurt competition overall is just as harmful as when they directly attack their competitors. The Act should expand its definition of “anti-competitive act” to include these instances.
- People deserve to be heard. Under the Act, private citizens should have the right to bring forward cases and complaints of companies' anti-competitive behaviour to the Bureau.

Monopolies threaten democracy and a fair society.

- Monopolies shouldn't exist. They are a sign of an extremely broken, unfair system, and Canada deserves better.
- For over 40 years, monopolies have grown unchecked in Canada with little pushback from our government.
- It's about much more than just prices, or even the right to choose where to spend your money. Giant corporations shouldn't be in charge of every facet of our society — that's a job for the people. Democratic control of our economy is an absolute necessity.

Sincerely,

10,081 undersigned

Appendix C: Ekō petition text and signatures,
Re: Consultation on the future of competition policy in Canada

March 31, 2022

Appendix C: Petition text and signatures. Ekō and 13,325 community members call on the government to end monopolies in Canada now.

To: Government of Canada

Monopolies are taking over Canada and threaten democracy and a fair society. Reform the Competition Act to: 1. Protect Canadians, not corporate giants; 2. Prevent monopolies from getting any bigger; and 3. Hold giant companies accountable.

Sincerely,

13,325 undersigned
