

To: The Honourable Pablo Rodriguez, Minister of Canadian Heritage House of Commons Ottawa, ON K1A 0A6

July 25, 2023

RE: Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework)

Dear Minister:

We are writing to you on behalf of OpenMedia, a community-based organization that works to keep the Internet open, affordable, and surveillance-free. We work toward creating informed and participatory digital policy by engaging nearly 300,000 people across Canada in protecting our online rights.

I'm writing to you today to share with you 5,568 OpenMedia community comments regarding the government's proposed new policy direction to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC). Further, in support of a majority of these comments, we would like to elaborate on our community's thoughts and concerns about the strengths and drawbacks of the direction. While we appreciate certain aspects of the policy direction aimed at addressing risks to user expression and user content, we strongly believe that further improvements and clarification are necessary to alleviate undue burdens on users.

To begin, we would like to express our strong support for several parts of the draft policy direction. Specifically, we commend the inclusion of provisions such as "implement discoverability in a way that respects and, where possible, increases choice for users while also minimizing the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertaking" and "Commission would only regulate social media platforms insofar as they are acting like broadcasters and not the social media elements of their services, which include any content created and uploaded by everyday users" (paras, 33, 27). We are hopeful that this instruction will guide the CRTC towards preserving the openness and diversity of online platforms and fostering an environment that respects user choice and expression.

However, to truly solidify and enhance these commitments, we urge you to ensure that the final version of the policy direction unequivocally rules out algorithm alteration, specifically any requirements to manipulate the outcomes in all feeds, playlists, or search results on a platform. Canadians should be able to find the content they want, without having 'CanCon' designated media forced upon them. It is crucial that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content remain voluntary and optional for users. By safeguarding individual choice and expression, C-11 can strike a balance between promoting Canadian content and respecting the diverse preferences of users.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640

We also have concerns regarding the lack of clarity in the policy direction regarding which services will be subject to regulation. We remain concerned that the ambiguity contained in the scope of the bill risks driving small and niche foreign platforms out of Canada. It is vital that the final direction explicitly and unambiguously delineates which services fall within the purview of Bill C-11 and concentrates the CRTC's regulation on those with substantial impact to ensure that Canadians do not lose access to these valuable platforms.

Lastly, we strongly urge the inclusion of a directive to redefine CanCon in order to promote fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities resulting from the implementation of Bill C-11 must be made equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of their chosen platform.

We implore you to carefully consider the concerns and recommendations presented in this letter. It is crucial that the final policy direction strike a delicate balance between safeguarding user expression and content while supporting the growth and vitality of the Canadian digital ecosystem. While having these protections enshrined in law would have been ideal, we are confident that with appropriate guidance, the C-11 policy direction can pave the way for a sustainable, equitable and rights-respecting regulatory framework that serves the best interests of all Canadians.

Please find below the 5,568 comments from OpenMedia community members.

We trust that you will give due consideration to the feedback we have provided.

Sincerely,

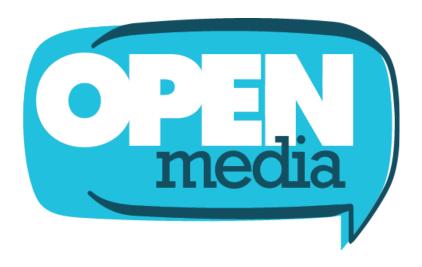

[Original Signed]

Ramneet Bhullar Campaigner, OpenMedia 1 (888) 441-2640 ext.712 ramneet@openmedia.org [Original Signed]

Matt Hatfield
Campaigns Director, OpenMedia
1 (888) 441-2640 ext. 1
matt@openmedia.org

Appendix A: Community Comments on Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework)

July 25, 2023

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that works to keep the Internet open, affordable, and surveillance free.

	Last name
First Name	initial	Province	Your Letter  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			5. Let everyone have a voice no matter the subject, then let each man and woman decide for them selves what is truth or lies!  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
:William:	В.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
A	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id intected not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A	Υ.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	_		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
•	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A	J.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing uscoverability provisions in a way total limitarizes are need to after adjointmis of productionings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users."
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A Canadian	I.	Columbia	All websites should be required to have an easily visible option to opt out of "PopUps."
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			All websites should be required to have an easily visible option to opt out of "PopUps."  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A Canadian	I.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (f) cynepact undernote orbice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A.	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social andia creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across the content of the policy direction rules out across the content of the policy direction rules out across the content of the policy direction rules out across the content of the policy direction rules out across the policy direction rules out across the content of the policy direction rules out across the policy direction rules out acro
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			PLEASE, STOP Bill C 11 as the Ignorance and Stupidity of Awareness is Outstandingly Embarrassing and Ridiculous.
			STOP the CONTROL and Censorship - PLEASE!
			STOP the Media Propaganda of LIES and Actual Mis Information that is being Shared.  As Canadians Deserve the TRUTH !!!
			ENOUGH is ENOUGH of the Nonsense, Control, Lies and Tyranny.
Δ	н	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Λ.	n.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC idented not to impose regulator yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			ulminoquossy, so we our to se access to universe excess. All the second of the second
			matter where they choose to create.
Aaren	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ridicii		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discovered unity provisions in a way trust minimizes the need to dated algorithms of products only discovered unity provisions in a way trust minimizes the need to dated algorithms of products only be excluding solid media users and creators and their content from regulation?  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- (A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			nature where they choose to Create.  I trust you will bake my feedback into consideration.
Aarika	U.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promotino Canadian content should be contained as the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promotino Canadian content should be contained as the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promotino Canadian content should be contained as the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	A.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	Р.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			<ul> <li>excluding social medical users and creators and their content from regulation;</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	A.	Island

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding Social regulations also after Center, from regulatory, from the control of the cont
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Aaron		Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	-	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks properly only in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's effort the Regulatory on the Regulatory of the Regulatory on the Regulator
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", so in excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			c. (the) CYRTC is directed onto impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to CYC respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Aaron	0.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and retire their content from regulation"; c. (the) *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIX" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Aaron	C.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	В.	Alberta

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverbility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			t. [the] CNTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[Or respect audiquence choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Aaron	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. In United by adoption lies of the Control of the
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matchy lurge choose to create
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aaron	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] C'KTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators*; d. and that the CRTC is directed to CPC (or respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the good policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed should algorithms work should be produced by the contract of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Abby	Р.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ABDUL	b.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoveriouslity provisions in a way that minimizes the need to arter algorithms or oroaccasting undertaixings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter hybrid reviews cross to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Abhay	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "excluding origin media users and real-tors, and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutionary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Abram	h.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbox and their content form requisition".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regiustion";  (_ithe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Page 1 - Pag				As a second control of
Alam 0 . Party and the process of the second process of the proces
C (But YCTC): de detact and to insecure regulatory requirements on online undertaking in created of prospect of scale and cold control.  2. To further exemption these companies in solidated control of control				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
be volumes and deficient to users like me, and any CICL distance distings in the second medicine that the pulse of the medicine distings are second to the pulse of the pulse				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Adam  A  1. The concerned both the parky demotion looks defined in which the requisited, and raise drivings varied and rother foreign varied and of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate single of online underlikating standy unabling varied by the C-11's implementation must the equally available to all Canadam orthon creaters. Any financial or primordinal opportunities created by the C-11's implementation must the equally available to all Canadam orthon creaters. Any financial or primordinal opportunities created by the C-11's implementation must the equally available to all Canadam orthon creaters.  Any concerned person in Canada, I am admitting may comments on the C-first Chainstands and Equitable threadstaining Regulatory Frameworks). While I approximate the drivil pictory direction's effects to address of the process of the control of the cont				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to bow online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Adam O.  Ostation  Adam O.  Osta				3.1/m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Finding Motion  As a concerned power in Carebal, 2 are administrating my comments on the Order Issuand Decision is the CRTC (Sudamanha and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While a appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address of professional control of the CRTC (Sudamanha and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While a appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address of the complete or window profession and the control of the CRTC (Sudamanha and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While a appreciate the draft policy direction and control of the CRTC (Sudamanha and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While a appreciate the draft policy direction and the control of the CRTC (Sudamanha and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While a appreciate the draft policy direction and control of the CRTC (Sudamanha and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While a appreciate the draft policy direction and control of the CRTC (Sudamanha and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While a appreciate the draft policy direction and control of the CRTC (Sudamanha and CRTC (Sudam				L. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Many  Age  Age  Age  Age  Age  Age  Age  Ag			Prince
L Piretyl, Wood like to express my strong spoots for the following patients on the following patients of the patients of t	Adam	м.	Edward
a. 				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
C (the) TCRT is described not to impose imposition prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social midial creations; a will not the CRT is described by Cynopies an admission, formers the beginn sharpers in a control to the CRT is described by Cynopies and admission in the CRT is described by Cynopies and admission of the CRT is described by Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clarify undertaking clarify under the program of a decidant to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creates. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by ISI C-11s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creates.  Li Firsty van ultake my refereback into consideration.  Adam 0. Ordano  Adam 0. Ordano  In Firsty I, should like to expression, I am admitting my comments on the Order Isolating Directions to the CRTIC (Sustanable and Equilable Broedcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the procession of the order to control and procession of the policy direction into our arrest-the-board apportment aberation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian control to order the CRTIC order and procession of the policy direction into our arrest-the-board apportment accordance and procession of the policy direction in depote and procession of the order to control and procession of the policy direction in depote and procession of a directio				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to two orine apportune and shadow and an orine from the choose whether to make use of them.  3. In monomed that the policy direction back carries and the regulatory and the driving and and niche from granterious ord granterious control to these services.  4. Leastly, I suppe the included or of affection to restate and applications of a ferention to restate and applications of the services and the properties and				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lack clarky or which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambigoodly, so we define be accessed to the services.  4. Latarly, I upp the inclusion of a direction to resure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or gramation opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  5. I trust you will be the prepared in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address of posed to online expression, I am asking you to spilolly and enhance these commentments in the Trust I version.  5. Individual to be express my proport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  5. Individual to a control of the control o				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
4. Lattly, Lurge the inclusion of a discription ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  John Ontario  And Ontario  And Including the Canadian on the Cheer Issuing Directions to the Chee				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and managing on we don't loca across to these services.
Adam 0. Ontario  Adam 1. Ontario  Adam 2. Ontario  Adam 3. A a concerned person in Casada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the implementing discount of the coloring guidance in the policy direction.  a. "Implementing discount of the coloring guidance in the policy direction.  a. Injudy I and the Expression of I and a service and creators and their contents from regulatory."  b. "reculating local media users and creators and their contents from regulatory."  d. and that the CRTC is directed to (1) respect admires choice and expression, it is crucial that the major that the CRTC is directed to (1) respect admires the close and applications of the policy direction rules used that the CRTC is directed to (1) respect admires the policy direction is individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the major than a service admires the policy direction is individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the major than a service admires the policy direction is an admirest than a service admirest the policy direction is an admirest than a service admirest the policy direction is an admirest than a service admirest th				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CNTC (Sustainable and Equitable Proadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction:  a. "Implementing Successariation, I am asking you to solidly an enhance these commitments in the final version."  a. "Implementing Successariation in a weight the minimach tender to the properties of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed in to impose regulatory registrements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed in to impose regulatory registrements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed in the impose regulatory registrements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to 10°C impose regulatory registrements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators." d. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final expection rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian combine creators and the concernment of the policy direction is desired to the canadian combine creators and the concernment of the policy direction is desired to the canadian combine creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators are considered to the concernment of the following puddiance in the final version.  I creatly invaded like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directions or
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following aguidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRTL is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to to "(or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengths these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final crucial that the final is crucial that the final crucial that the final is crucial that the final version.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address it be voluntary and optional	Adam	0.	Ontario	As a second page in Canada I am extensition my comments on the Order Insuina Directions to the COTT (Sustainable and Equitable Grandestina Devolutions Examples of the death policy direction's offsets to address the circle
a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Textuding coals media sures and creators and their contents from regulatory. b. Textuding coals media sures and creators and their contents from regulatory. d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the fall version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy directice looks carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to essure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and the policy direction is the policy direction of the fair the policy direction is the fair version.  4. Lastly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:  a "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all regulations of productions are discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all regulations are discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all regulations are discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all regulations of production of production of production of production of production their seventher to mines used the policy direct				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
C. [Pht] CRTC is directed on to timpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs adiable.  d. and that the CRTC is directed to ("prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the choice was adiable."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expressions, it is crucial that the final version the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC individual choice and expressions, it is crucial that the final version and the concernments of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con the voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version.  3. The concerned that the policy direction less clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canadia. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and their content from regulation.  Adam L. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, in any part triminal and expression, in the policy direction and access and their content from regulation, by a succession and accessing and				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concended that the policy direction lacks carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  Adam L. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the prosect on online person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Porter Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the prosection of the policy direction and the control of the policy direction in the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian control to the control of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian control to the voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be required, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to th				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Adam L. Ontario  Adam L. Ontario  Adam L. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posset to online expression, I is recommitment to incline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  a. Institute to will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posset to online expression, I is crue what minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRTC is directed on to "(c) repect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further stenghent hese commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crue that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks called any online indertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and them they obose to create.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation mus				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The content where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Adam  L  Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expressor, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. 'Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjustment of the policy direction is a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjustment of the policy direction (and the CRTC is directed to "to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings";  c. Intel "CRTC is directed to "to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "to" respect adjustments the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction lacks drafty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings of the medical proprisms of the policy direction is provided to all				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Litrust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Adam  L  Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the pose to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I yould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: 2. In the committee of t				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to noline expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the inflowing guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a why that inflinate states and the control of the policy direction of the policy direction and the policy direction of the policy direction and the policy direction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and the province of the policy direction's efforts to address the possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media series and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(or prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and ny CRTC-directed changes to how disploying the should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't bise access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. Saskatchew  Adam R.  4. Lastly, I use difficulties and a equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and the content for all canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C	Adam	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft colicy direction's efforts to address the risks
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (to) respect undertice choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and yCRTC-directed changes to how disposition, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and yCRTC-directed changes to how dispositions, increase the options available."  2. I'm oncermed that the policy direction is and a further than a second or online undertakings of the policy direction rules out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportuniti				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks catrly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online cre matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. In further the child is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available:  4. Lord that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underskings in respect of programs of social media creators';  5. And that the CRTC is directed not in online underskings in respect of programs of social media creators';  6. and that the CRTC is directed not individual shorted and expression, I treasing that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alte				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online cre matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Saskatchewa n  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators,"  d. and that the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments to me the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation must define the appropriate scope of online appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the possible, increase the options available."  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation must define the appropriate scope of online appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the first the draft policy direct				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be well unless and optional to users like me, and any CPTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me, those whether to make use of them
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators in the CRIT (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online upon the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementation must be equally available."  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. telly "CRIT" is directed not to impose regulations;  d. and that the CRIT is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it revails that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con				3.1 I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Adam R.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like the express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements in online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is uniqued that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con				L. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the option of the committee of th				I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. their Ord. I was not to the content from the content from regulation of the content for the content for media under the content for	Adam	R.	Saskatchewa n
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
<ol><li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian core be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li></ol>				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.				Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Saskatchewa			Carlatete	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adam D. n  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).	Adam	D.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from requilation",
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect undernee choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRCT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation", and the content from regulation and the regulation and the content from regulation and the regulation and the regulation and regulati			British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how classified algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian o	Adam	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks nosed to notine expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) CRCC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further stronglishen bees commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The policy direction was a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address it				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media scoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media scoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) respect undertake choics, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and ny CRTC-directed changes to how disclosured changes to how house langiorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  1. Trustly, I would like to express my strong outport for the following guidance in the policy directions to the CRTC				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media success and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online cre matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Adam W. Columbia  A concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the oscional proper of the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation must define the appropriate size the edit on ensure fair and				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. the control of the contr				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-hoard algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Capadian content should
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and the variety of the control of the				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not in impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings dearly unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Social media services and social media services and social media services and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framewor				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lone access to these services.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (help 'CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIT is directed to 'C() respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings dearly unambiguouslys, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the pos				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the	udIII	υ.	11	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
				Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*;</li> <li>C, the 1 CRIC is directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators*;</li> <li>C, the 1 CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators*;</li> </ol>				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed ton't to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ol>				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their connect from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. Ighe "CRTG is directed not to impose regulatory requirements to nonline undertaking respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements to nonline undertaking and another than the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludings oocial media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. I they "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work: should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludings oocial media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. I they "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work: should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in sepect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undership as available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concenned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludings goodal media scene and creators and their content from regulation," b. "explication goodal media scene and creators and their content from regulation," c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.				matter where they choose to create.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media scene and creators and their context from regulation," c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludings goodal media scene and creators and their content from regulation," b. "explication goodal media scene and creators and their content from regulation," c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.				Trust you will take my foodback into consideration
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation", c. [the] CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in sepact of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and nay CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.			British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRITC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. It is trust you will take my feedback into consideration.	Adam	w.	British Columbia
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (to respect undertee choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal breatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online crea			Solutions	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation; c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators are the commitment of the policy direction of the policy direction must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equ				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengther these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is undertaking a visual properties of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and the promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address it				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking needs to programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed not (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRITC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators are they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British Columbia  W. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings respect to priors available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and ny CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equ				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not longous regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguouslys, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction:  As a concerned person in Canada, I am				c. [tmg   KK1 is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and Ix that KRIC is directed to (C) exspect adulation choice and, where possible, increase the options available". d. d
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation," C. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators are the commitment of the commitment of the commitment of the commitment of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  a. "Implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators."  a. "In proving the commitment of the policy directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the open of online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  a. "In proving the commitment of the commitment of the p
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. to another the policy direction in the policy direction in the policy direction in the policy direction in the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online unabliquously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comm				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-hoard algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. The control of the provision of the policy direction in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. The further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings dearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators are the commitment of the control of th				2. To further strengther between these committees the expension, it is crucial half writing of the first policy direction policy direction policy direction received by the policy direction policy direction and policy direction alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction policy direction and only of them.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed to its increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRITC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings dearly unambiguously, so we don't be sea cases to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators and the columbia.  British Columbia  W. Solumbia  W. Solumbia  W. Solumbia  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lone access to these services.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] CRITC* is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC* is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC* is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is evident that the policy direction index out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian con be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRITC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't lose access to three services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3 a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is a three properties of the draft policy direction is a weight that minimizes the need to alter algorithms work				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not invidual choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further attemption these commitments to invidual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online cre matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the pose to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all canadian online creators"; d. d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakin			British	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Please take the flowing point to heart and at any opportunity you have a choice, please respect the fundamental tenants of a free society and do not interfere or excersize any authority you have unjustly been granted. Soon it will be removed (when new government arrives) and you will not need to contend with how to use this tyranical authority in non-tyranical ways. till then do as little as you possibly can with it the people remember and we will be here long after the current oporement is just a divid and enhances ing memory do not become part of the problem.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverations provisions in a way trust imminizes the need to after adjointmis of oreactasting indectastings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 mc concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adam	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjoorthms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media usees and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media usees and creators and their content from regulation," c. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adam	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't to see access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
adam	r.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			The government has no business deciding what I can and can't watch. Leave my feeds alone!
Adam	v.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
raum		Coldinold	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ADAMO	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media user activation of the content of the conten
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
ADAMO	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adele	В.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me to use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adelle	R.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding as only amedia users, and preators and help content from regulation".
			D. Exclusing social mental users and treatests and their content front regulation in     (the) "CRIS disdrected not known impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adem	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			* Lasty, Tudge (in 1 discuss) of discussion described an equal returned to an Canadian distinct described by discussion described an equal variable to an Canadian distinct described by discussion of discussion described by Adhithya	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Autilitiya	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adhithya	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrian	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks nosed to notine expression. I am action you to collidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrian	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (; the   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrian	C.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that CRTC is directed to (c) respect suddence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Adrian	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
runun		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. O'utilities and optional to use of the me, and any CRTC-directed durings to floor of the standard of the control of the con
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrian	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1" CRTC is directed to (°) ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  (the continue of the continue of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Adrian	v.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 in Contented user use plants of the pulsey of the puls
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrian	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			insue whee due to ceae.  It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrian	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Exclusing social meterial bases and creators and unter Content from regulation;  (E [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be vousturely and updated in Users merine, and any U.R.C. undertexturely continued and updated in the c
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
adrian	b.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
uul IBH		Columbid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			a. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and excression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adriana	C.	Ontario

			, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrianna	K.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adrienne	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. "Ethe" (NTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
veriol	A.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Age	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  Care of CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
gnieszka	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creaturs and their content from regulation", c. [ they "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ahmed	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adjection control only where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed to "Cyl respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Aidan	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aldali	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulation y on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aidan	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aiden	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Aiden	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aldell	n.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of oreaccasing undertakings;     invectioning social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     it has "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should <ol> <li>in uniform strengther three commitments to disvolution from the commitments to disvolution three commitments to disvolution from the commitments to disvolution from the commitments are committed from the commitments to disvolution from the commitments are committed from the commitme</li></ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aimen	z.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "seviculing social media users and creators and their content from reputation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user is like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chuse whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aisha	s.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that ininimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Akiva	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Al	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Al	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Al	т.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Al	G.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "evulution social media users and reservant and their content from reputation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Al	0.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			Light Cast Cast Cast Cast Cast Cast Cast Cas
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MI	5.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Al	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "O'; respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
alaın	I.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alain	L.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alain	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alain	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRIT is directed to "for respect audiquince choice and, where possible, prorease the ootions available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alain	R.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (File) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alain	В.	Columbia

			As a concepted person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Developed person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Developed person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Developed person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Developed person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Developed person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the Orde
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alaine	R.	British Columbia	As a proposed page of a post I am submitting as commonts on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Proposed page of Directions France and Directions to the dark policy directions of State to address the size.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	C.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation and the strong social media users and creators and their content from regulation and the strong social media users and creators and the strong social media creators and the strong social media creators and the strong social media creators and social
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alan	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreion services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alan	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	R.	Ontario	a uses you min take my required man continued about.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to Impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of soals andial creators"; d. and in CRTC is directed to 'to' (or respect audience choice and), where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			the voluntary and opcorate does not be repeated to the control of
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Manitoha	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	K.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online secression. I am a sking was to assignify and enhances these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "avalution social media users and creators and their content from population"
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listly 1 Light fell forms they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	Α.	British Columbia	No institute, gouvernement or person has any right to censor free speech by legal law EVER!
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	T.	Quebec
			As a concerned citizen in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I request you to solidifylentance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First, strong support for this guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "Rexcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, the final version of the policy direction must rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Measures to promote Canadian content should be voluntary and optional, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to use them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Last, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alex		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan Alan	S. R.	Ontario Ontario	I intend to subscribe to a VPN, so that I will appear to be outside of Canada, thus evading your censorship.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Exclusing social metal acts and useful soft careful in our signature in
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alan	P.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content in the content in</li></ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alan	K.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," or content from regulations, city of the content from regulations or city of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alan	S.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alana	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC. Bill C11 should be completely removed. Canadian content should compete fairly in the market and not be supported with tax dollars. Also freedom of speech should not be impacted or restricted in any way.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks prosent to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTL is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alanna	D.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adultance choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alasdair	S.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Albert	J.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 5.1 Introducting that the policy unecurion is access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Albert	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Albert	1.	Saskatchewa

			As a percented approximate on the Order Insulant
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Albert	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements to programs of social media creators"; c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.  3. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work (aka censorship) should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Any measures a linear at promoting Calabian content should be evolutionly and uppoint to users like the, and any CKT-Canacted changes to now unime algorithms work (and censorship) should let me choose whether to make use of them.  4. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada.
			5. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Albert	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to dimine expression; I am asking you to soliuly and enhance these communitients in the limit version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alberto	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alberto	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aldona	v.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would nike to expless my soung support to the roll continuing squarket in the planty of useful countries.  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [mg] UK1. is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect or programs of social media creators; di. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strendthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Aledin M.	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; (Ethe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. days, tage the includes not suited the later and an expension of the later and an expension of the later and the later and an expension of the later and
Alejandro	Α.	British Columbia

			As a concerned access in Canada, I am submitted my commonts on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Developer). While I recognized the definition of the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Developer).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exacuting social means and references and viter content from regulation /,  (E) the j "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alejandro	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "Cy" (cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
aleksa	b.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aleksander	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to *C) cryseptc audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aleksandra	J.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and helfer content from regulation";  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs also social media cereators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	S.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	N.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	12.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alex	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and potional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			mater where uner close to deate.  I trust you will take my feetback into consideration.
Alex	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unaminguousy, so we on tiose access to these services.  Al Lastly, I cree the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alex	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "imolementino discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
alex	k.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	V.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alev	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
AIEX	141.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alex	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			to. Exclusing Social mental obers and treators and unter contribution in regulation; c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. I strongly support the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoulbe voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Last, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alex	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks nosed to notine expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the contained at promoting Canadian content should be contained at promoting contained at pr
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
alex	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoulbe voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexander	c.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexander	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that the minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a "Implementing the minimizes and the minimizes of provisions of the minimizes and the minimizes are also also altered the minimizes are also altered and the minimizes are altered and the minimizes are also altered and the minimizes are altered and t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexander	E.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexander	C.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," content in the second s
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alexander	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRIT: a directed to "for respect audionizes choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRIT: a directed to "for respect audionizes choice and, where possible, increase the options and examples".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexander	м.	d and Labrador
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(?) respect adultance choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alexander	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CXTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alexandra	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Excluding Social metal asses and useful a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexandra	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- (A Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexandra	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexandra	Α.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed no to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alexandre	В.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreion services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alexandre	6	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
cauriure	J.	Jimario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei   "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosy and the choos
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexis	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alexis	M.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and restors and their content from regulation", (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alfred	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitor y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ali	Α.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ali	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; good and the content of the content of the content from the content
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alice	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alicia	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding-social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			to Excluding Sucial metal users and Learness and unter Content from regulation , and the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alicia	М.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. Ithe I "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakinos in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routined by the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routined by the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routined by the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routined by the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routined by the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routined by the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be recommended by the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be recommended by the policy direction rules of the policy direction rules out across the
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Aliaia	c	Albani	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alicia	S.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alida	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Alin	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aline	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and heli crother from regulation"; c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and delicine choice and, where possible, increase the options availables"; d. and that the CRTC is directed by "Cyr expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alisa	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creations and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creations and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media tusers and creations and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media creations"; d. "excluding social media tusers and creations and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media creations"; d. "excluding social media tusers and creations and their content from their cont
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alisia	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", critical regulation and the content from regulation and regulation
			a. and that the UNIC is directed on (f) respect adulence intoice and, where prossible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alison	В.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and relations and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creations and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media creations"; d.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alison	L.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators (c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alison	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ALISON	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alison	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing duscribed abunk provisions in a weby tisk imminizes the reach of other importances on the duscribed by the second programs of social media creators.  (a. of the third CRT is directed to "C)" respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allain	G.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and unit cut exist is unextend to (c) respect administration entirely, where possible, inclease use options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allan	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allan	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Allan	E.	Alberta	LI UUSL YVU MIIII GARE III Y ICEUUUSA III.U CUITSIUEI BUUIT.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. May 7 Ling for the choice to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ALLAN	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insue whee days does does. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allan	w.	British Columbia	A CONTROL OF THE PROPERTY OF T
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allan	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should be used to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should be used.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			For example The Filipino Channel, BritBox, (Porn Sites)  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Allan	M.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allali		Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing uscoverations provisions in a way dust imminutes one need to after adjoint into includations in provisions in a way to attend the content from pollutions.  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from pollutions",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allan	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding south means are a rule custom and the content from regulation."  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Allen	Ε.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	_		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allen	L.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "In CRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "In CRTC is directed to "Created and endence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any UKIL-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Allen	E.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allen	r.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allen	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1"at TRCT is directed to (°) (respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Allison	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alma	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alton	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alvin	E.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Alv	P.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a supposed course in County Law supposition as a supposed so the Order Law in Princeton to th
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alker algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alker algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT Ls directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cr prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mater where they choose to created.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alyson	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [uie] CNC is directed into the place of the control of the cont
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chow whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alyssa	G.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT Lis directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) respect adultinence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" espect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Amanda	Α.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	C.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	v.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverballity provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing social mention tasks and user control and user control in the expectation of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	P.	Saskatchewa n	sours from mannering receipeds that Contact Bloth.

			As a second consist of the substitute of the control of the contro
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	K.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "CyC respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		D 2011	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	Р.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "O' ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the oothors."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amanda	R.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and</li> </ol>
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Censorship is NOT democracy!!
Amanda	н.	Ontario
			Get out of my feeds!  Repeal the Bill!
Amanda	S.	Ontario	Have a good day,  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator prequirements on nonline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			. casy, tage the household a direction to ensure rail and equal deathers to an canadian online creators, any maricial or promotion upportunities deated by an C-11's implementation must be equally available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amber	0.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amelia	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "Understanding discovering and provinces where the contract meter and introduces and introduc
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Amelia	D	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amena		Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			In the controlled out on the policy direction to ensure fair and could reatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or or ormotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. The country is the country and unambiguous country.    A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and country are country and unambiguous country. The country are considered as a country and unambiguous country.    A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and country available to all Canadian online creators, and the country are considered as a country and unambiguous country.    A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and country are considered as a country and unambiguous country.    A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and country are considered as a country and unambiguous country.    A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and country are considered as a country and unambiguous country and unambiguous country are considered as a country are considered as a country and unambiguous country are considered as a country and unambiguous country are considered as a country and unambiguous country are considered as a country are co
			. casy, tage the incusion of a direction to estate rail and equal regular teatment for an canadian online clearurs. Any milancial or promotion opportunities cleared by an C-11s implementation must be equally available to an canadian online clearurs, no matter where they choose to create.  Please stop fixing what's canadian not broken.
			Please stop roung what is canadian not droken.  Controlling and overreach reminds me of China and the wef and other global organizations that want to control humanity for their own benefit.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amilcar	Р.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation "requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amin	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am assing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following audiance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on nonline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
A		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amirhosseir	1 G.	COLUITORA

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclosing Social medical bases and sections are determined from Egipation.  (Ethel "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amos	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amr	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding-social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (Except in matters of national security)  1. "Except in matters of national security)  1. "Except in matters of national security)
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". Except in matters of national security.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. Except in matters of national security.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amrith	K.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amy	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amy	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amy	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Amy	P.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience notice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ana	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed on the property of
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	D	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alld	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ana	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anastasia	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose for create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andre	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I uge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andre	F.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andre	Р.	Ontario	4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to Impose regulatory requirements on conline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and hat Met RCRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andre	В.	Ontario	a uses you will case inly recourse into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andre	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. If not, then REVOKE BILL C-11.
Andre		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y neurine so nonline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
André	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andre	-	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me to well the rules use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "imolementino discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "TRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andrea	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. the RCTC is directed to "Cy' expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrea	z.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalition".
			b. Exclusing solar interactions are the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andrea	E.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allurea	с.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	F.	British Columbia
			Stop censoring feeds!!  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andrea	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social metal acrea and restrictions and restriction of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sorial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing social metical bases and useful control in success the second of the seco
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration, and listen to the voice of the people
Andrea	Р.	British Columbia
			The job of any government is to create a safe space and quality life for we the people. We the people who pay taxes and your pay cheques.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrea	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restroors and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andreas	L.	Ontario	As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andreas	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
-wured5	11.	ColuiTIDId	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andreas	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRT ic directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andree	м.	British Columbia

			As a concepted agree in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Ignation to the CPTC (Sustainable and Savidable Residual Savidable Residu
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrei	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the provision of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the provision of the provisions of the provision of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrei	т.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "workulum exist media users and escaptors and this content from provisions".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andres	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation and the content from regulation and regulation
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andres	М.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation and the content from regulation and regulation
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	L.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. "expressions of the content of the content from regulation; d. "expressions" and the content of the content from regulation; d. "expressions" and the content of the content from regulation; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	Р.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	м.	Quebec	sweet from millioning receiping time certified growth

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed to "Cy) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, one word to lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "evulution social media issess and reators and their nontent from regulation";  h. "evulution social media issess and reators and their nontent from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	D.	Ontario

			As a concepted necron in Canada, Lam culomitting my composite on the Order Insuino Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilabel Residential Reside
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Chanda I am submitting my comments on the Order Insuine Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Equitable Properties Booulatons Examples of the draft policy directions's effects to address the nicks
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	z.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	т.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to 'to' (cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	F.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a woy that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRC is directed to "CyC respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			to. Excusing social menal users and creations and user connects rount regulation),  (c) the j "CRIS" is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inamininusly, so we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	C.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. Textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; expression of the content of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	v.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allulew	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' (expect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	к.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c thei] "CNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a wythat minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	К.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
riidicii		Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interlatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cyc respect audience choice and, where cossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
andrew	v.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	R.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			in the state of th
			I think this whole bill is a waste of time and money. Certainly this cannot be of concern with the issues going on today.  I do not require the government to monitor or censor any internet or streaming options. Requiring companies to promote content that I don't want to see simply is a waste of thought.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	w.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	н.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	М.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Andrew	К.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		22110	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Andrew	H.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Further, I am fully opposed to this current government broad overreach into the public sphere and personal rights and privacy of the individual. The government has not made
			A conclusive nor a conclusive case that there is in fact a need for this additional oversight and infringement on my personal rights nor what I view or contribute to. It is appalling to me the repeated overrach the government is trying to legislate into the lives of Canadians. In fact, the Literals will henceforth be known as the thirds-speak Oncellan government by their repeated northing into people's private lives. These are not endeavours to be taken lightly, as the consequences affect people's everyday lives. The internet was not designed to be controlled by government, as its usefulness and purposes far exceed the limited understanding of political policy. In fact, the issue of any kind of surveillance should at the very least, be a referendum issue,
Andrew	K.	Alberta	fully decided by the people. With all of the above in mind, I urge this bill to either be removed completely or at the very least, minimized in its powers.

			Ordinarily, I re-write comments for submission. Forever, the following encapsulates my feelings succinctly.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstyr, would like to express my storing support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ndrew	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work, should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ndrew	N.	Yukon	Luss you will cake thy recodes into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			a. Implementing uscordantly provisions in a way user minimizes the need or alter algorithms or broadcasting undercastings; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ndriy	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pose too soline expression, I am anximy pow to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y content so online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter by from the creators.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ndy	s.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final varieties of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ngel	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I, would like to express my strong support for the rolinowing gluidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ngel	N.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing South installables and useful soft and the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			A second data in Control Landbridge and the Control Institute Control Control Institute Control Control Institute Control Cont
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	H.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs directed inclusive side includes the impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. days, rug ve in chusan or a vinculation or allocation of character of characters of the characters
Angela	F.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angola	D.	Allegates

			As a concepted person in Canada. Lam submitting my composite on the Order Jesuine Directions to the CRT (Sustainable and Sustainable and Susta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			7. days, tage ten inclusion or a letteration to elastic lan and equal realization of an Canadian ordinary, tage ten inclusion or a letteration of the care and th
Angela	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". decreasing people's options is never the better way to go. It leads to stuff like people preferring stuff made in either America or Britain or Australia. also that sort of algothsmic manipulation is why the masty violent rightswing messages have been able to spreads or much. and also because corporations are are into playing things safe all the real innovation and fresh stuff is made by
			to Australia. also that Sort or agglorithm manipulation is why the hasty vibrality injuriting messages have been one to spread so much, and also because corporations are all a more playing timings sale an the real minovation and resh such is made by people outside those structures, so if you cut them off you are stiffing the very things you want and need to keep our culture from being absorbed into the that of the USA.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angela	w.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [us] Valve & Uniform the CRITCE in the CR
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Angele	В.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angelia	М.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angelika	к.	Ontario

			First, please note: Having government control the news is and theft of the public's basic freedom. It opens the way to absolute control of citizens by people whose motivation is most often personal profit. Politicians in office can control the CRTC for their own benefit by eliminating news that is unfavourable to them. These people want to believe they are superior and wish to gull the public into believing the same. The current Liberal government has the attitude that they are right and people just have to put up with their ideas. What happened to persuading voters through informing lene? Ask that question now or ask it after being kicked out by the electrons deciring the next electron.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Angelika	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creaturs and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angie	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Angus	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ania	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anika	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidiny and enhance mese commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a. "In a supplementary of the provisions of the policy of the policy directions of the policy directions."
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Anita	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Daikial	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anita	S.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Leave my internet feeds alone!!!  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anita	н.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ann	т.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understandings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ann	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and the content from regulation", c. [the first of a directed not to impose regulation regulation or milier undertaking in respect of programs of social media users are regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 'the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ann	т.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ann	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understandings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ann	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ann	k.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding social metal assets and clearly safe unter Content from regulation; c. (Ethe) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Anna		Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aind	Li	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (t) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna	F.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and if CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and if CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
anna	h.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on orline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	D	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna	В.	COIGIUDIA	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and excression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna	K.	Ontario

			As a concerned agree in Canada. Lam submitting my commonts on the Order Issuing Disortions to the COTO (Contributed and Emiliable Decades like Decad
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna	Н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a special provision and the state of the state
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Anna	М.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna	0.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. In resty, 1. Would like to express my strong support for the intollowing gludatice in the planty directions.  1. In resty, 1. Would like to express my strong support for the relationship of the planty directionship of the p
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anna Louise	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c)" respect adulatione: obvice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c)" respect adulatione: obvice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Annabel	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	L.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media creators"; b. "CRTC is directed not to impose requirements on online undertakings in respect to programs of social media crea
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3. In Concentred that the policy direction that School you make school you make school and the s
			matter where they choose to create.
Anne	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a responsed parson in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Jesuing Disordings to the COTO (Contributed and Emiliable Decaderalise Deca
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	J.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Anne	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concentral that the policy direction lacks carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambinuously. so we don't live across to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	D.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	0.	Columbia

			, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metical bases and useful solid literature from regulation; (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding-soil media users and creators and their content from requisition", b. "excluding-soil media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	М.	Ontario	Plus, the regulations need to conform to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; not based on government narrative to restrict freedom of speech. Censorship of Canadian voices that support freedom and democracy is not sustainable.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Anne	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne	Υ.	Alberta	IMPORTANT:
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC 6 directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Anne	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne Helen	C.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne Marie	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anne-Marie	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulators from regulators (requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anneliese	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to "(c) respect addingence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To turther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-C directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lock access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will alke my feedback into consideration.
Annemarie	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Annemieke	0	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	D	Onto :	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Annette	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding nosignal media users and creators and their content from one long their content from the provision of the pr
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			 Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Annette	G.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [bit] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RRTC is directed in CyC respect suidiners choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Annik		Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Alliik		Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation year undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ante	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reputation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "treat RCRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online eleorithms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Anthony	C.	Newfoundlan d and Labrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thej) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony	м.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Anthony	Р.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony		Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC Sel directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requisited, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony	В.	Ontario

			As a concepted person in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israina Directions to the OPTC (Surbinable and Emiliable Developers). While I recognise the defi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the prov
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony	Υ.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizesk the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Anthony	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. Textuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; expression of the content of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Anthony	Р.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Antio	G.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Antje	G.	Albeitd	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed Copy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed Copy copy calculations considered in the copy copy copy copy copy copy copy copy
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Antonio	F	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect, adulatine choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Antonio	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Allcollio		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, large the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Antoon	Q.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and direct order from regulation"; since the control of the control of the content from regulation is a control of the control of th
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (°) crespect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available."  (RTC) consideration of the consideration of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be routinary and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-Gircticet defenses to how online aloughting work whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
April	К.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am assign you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it kie me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
April	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
A 1	6.	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
April	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the ORTC indirected in "Color programs of the programs
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aquilla	0.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am askino you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arash	Α.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation "requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arden	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ardith	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ari	a.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ARIE	М.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Arie Hugo	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRTLs directed to for CI respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the content and analysis of the content of the co
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arieke	K.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Arlene	Р.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arlene	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
arlene	l.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy, direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for ALL Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n matter where they choose to create.
			5. IF the Canadian government should limit Canadians right to personally decide what "truth" is to each individual tax paying citizen, then Canadian taxes should in NO way be paid to any public news or media broadcast corporation or outlet. START dismantling news bias IN Canada and STOP tax-incentivized bias-reporting from profitting on Canadians of dime.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arlene	Υ.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these committents to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction uses out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul between doptional to users like me, and any (CRT-directed changes to how online) algorithms work should let me choose the other.
			3. I'm oncerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unamadated to the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unamadated to the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertaking clearly and under the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and under the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and under the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and under the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and under the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and under the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of the control of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define the control of Canada. The final direction must define insus where usey undoes to desire. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			- Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Arlix	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoulbe voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
armando	m.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Scrap C11 it is a trash Bill.  We are not interested in it we want freedom of what we can watch and consider. The Canadian Government has been aggressively going towards a censorship model that we are not comfortable with. The entire mainstream media already as it is does Armando	T.	Ontario	we are not interested in it we want rreason or what we can watch and consider. The Landanian covernment has been aggressively going towards a censorship model that we are not comfortable with. The entire mainstream media already as it is does represent us or the facts the internet should go back to being free and equal and not dictated by Governments and Companies.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. F1SY, 1 Would like to express my strong support for the rollowing gludance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose requistory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not by (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Armin	K.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arnon	C.	Columbia

			As a concentral corresponding the control of the Code Technique to
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arries	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Arshad	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arsham	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Arshish	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pil Sill Sil	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Art	Z.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to 'Orl respect adveloper choice and where possible, increase the sortions available.'
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Art	w.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and heir content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Artom		Ontonia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media.  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arthur	М.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to dismit expression, and assuing you destinate an extension of the second of th
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arthur	В.	Ontario	Total you mit take in y recouled into consultation.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am and sking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To during an optional to summittee the summer of the su
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unantibility on we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arthur	к.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			to the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arthur	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration before we all have to use nostr for our communication.
Arthur	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulatione: Ohiose and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Arun	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		Alberta

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ashlee		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Asniee	В.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ashley	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ashley	C.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ashley	C.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ashley	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
namey	ь.	Albeitd	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ashley	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to diline expression; I and asking you to solutily and enlance these communities in the linit version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Achley	c	British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (') crepect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			as the countries of the
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty, Turgs the inclusion of a direction to ensure rair and equal treatment for all chandian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by sill U-11 s implementation must be equally available to all chandian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ashley Ashraf	C. G.	Columbia Ontario	content and feeds MUST remain free from regulation and manipulation.  We are quietly becoming North Korea or Communist China where the State deems what is "acceptable" and only allows voices and opinions to express a "favourable" view, while shutting down all dissenting or opposition voices.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users are regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media under a content of the respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Asif	Q.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
sock	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
thanasios	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
tticus	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation; c. [their CRTC is directed to to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where socialise, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content show be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiduously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I greate hindusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose for create.
		D 111.2	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Attikus	Н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
udrey	G.	Quebec

			As a concerned operan in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Ironina Riccations to the COVE (Contributely and Springly).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC E directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC E directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			. Lassy, Turge the inclusion to a direction to ensure fair and equal deathers for an Canadian online deators, normalities or promotion opportunities deated by Bin C-11's implementation must be equally available to an Canadian online deators, normalities matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Audrey	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators." d. "excluding social media users
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Audrey	E.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do continue expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. In surf. : Adult in the Copies in six any gapper to the troin owning youther for in the point, when the surf is a surf in the point of the point the point
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of hem.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lastry, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Audrey	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. In the process of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Audrey	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Audrey	Y.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my atrong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available":  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			De voluntary and optomat to users like me, and any LK L-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and immambiations we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aurel	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing doctore about power with in a way take intrinsities were reset to diservation in an object to diservation in the properties of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
A	T	0

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
austin	a.	Ontario	As a student and content creator in Canada, I'm submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the skep control of control expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation"; social media users and creators and their content from requiation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Austin	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition"; social media users and creators and their content from requisition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Avian	Υ.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British	Please treat Canadians with the respect we demand!
Axel	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ayub	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provision is a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the   CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0.1.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Aziz	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Aziz	P	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
В	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators* d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect undertine crokice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be revoluting and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work of should let me choice whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" esspect aduationer choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.    Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
3. 1.	w.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am anxing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastry, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no metry choose to create the contract of the co
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3.J.	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the Innai version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bailey	Р.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alteral applications of the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", d. "excluding social media users and creators and c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Baillargeon	L.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
_

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; d. the] CRTC is directed to (c) respect outlender choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and opcorat to users like me, and any LKI L-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BALJIT	U.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation,"
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. AGAIN, NO manpulation of my online feed.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
barb	g.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. Listy 1 tig to the filteration of a flection to ensure rail and equal deathert to an Canadian timine cleaturs, any inflation of promotion opportunities cleated by an C-115 implementation must be equally available to an Canadian timine cleaturs, no matter where they choose to create.
			I also strenuously object to big tech companies like Google having the power to eliminate the publication of local news. It is dangerous and undemocratic.
Barb	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To further schedighed these confirmations of involved in the confirmation of the co
			3. Two concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration,
BarBara	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			D. excuang social meals users and creators and their content from regulation; Cittle] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barbara	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reputation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Barbara	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
0 0 0 0	J.	Jinario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  Carbuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Castly, 1 trigg the inclusion of a direction to ensure rair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter whose the castle of the castl
			*. Lasty, tage one introduced to a consideration.  It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barbara	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y content from regulation", cc. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Barbara	Н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barbara	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barbara	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barbara	D.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "to" (or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barbara	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>a. exculang social media users an or rearrors and meir content from regulation;</li> <li>c. (Ethe) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barbara	L.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will ake my feedback into consideration.
Barbara J	G.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CXTC is directed to "Cy' esspect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and used the CRC is directed to (c) respect addiction and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mater where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barrie	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.3 in Control on the factor of the factor o
			4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Lastly, I consider it very important that the Bill does not include any legislation that gives the CRTC and/or any other government body the vitally important definition of what and what is not "misinformation", "hate speech" etc. It is necessary to ensure that content that is clearly "hate speech" and other dangerously abusive content, as understood by a large majority of Canadians, is regulated accordingly. It is vital, however, that the Government cannot arbitrarily make such determinations on ensure use content was observed upon the present and under undergood and a content that could be considered opinions (Free Speech as such) and that does not offend large groups of a Gandalians, should not be altered, restricted or banned by an incident of the present of the content that could be considered opinions (Free Speech as such) and that does not offend large groups of a Gandalians, should not be altered, restricted or banned by an incident of the present of
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barrie	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and or "Cry espect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lastry, Tulge to first closes to calculate and an equal reasonation of an extraordinary to the following control of the con
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
barry	C.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.    Turst you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barry	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Barry	м.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		. 101110000	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barry	м.	Manitoba	states from the tarte and recommendate contained and states and the states are the states and the states and the states are th

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barry	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Pristy, I would use to express my soring support for the following glutation: in the point, vine-cutor: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barry	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barry	Р.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implemental discoverability provisions in a year but that minimizes the need to alter all apportunes of provisions in a year that minimizes the need to alter all apportunes of provisions in a year that minimizes the need to alter all apportunes or the need to alter all apportunes
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Barry	D.	Alberta	unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Barry	D.	Alberta	unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
Barry	D.	Alberta	unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barry	D.	Alberta	unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!
Barry	D.	Alberta	unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.
Barry	D.	Alberta	unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's As minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in
Barry	D	Alberta	4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong upport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Firstly, I would like to express and circators and their content from regulation',  3. Evaluding social media users my story a
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter clondorms of broadcasting undertakings";
			A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. Excluding social media users and creators and their conte
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementation of the policy direction in the calcidence choice and wylerse possible, increase the options wallable.  The conc
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  I he internet with it's plus's increase the heat of content and the
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I frestly I novell like to express my storpos apport for the following quickness in the programment of the policy direction in a solid like to express my storpos apport for the following quickness the programment of programment of the
Barry			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  I Firstly I model like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  I Firstly I model like t
	S.	Ontario British	4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I frestly I novell like to express my storpos apport for the following quickness in the programment of the policy direction in a solid like to express my storpos apport for the following quickness the programment of programment of the
Barry	S.	Ontario British	Lastly, Large the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation in sunch less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in natural  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I fristly I would like the capacity as symmetry as supposed to the folioning guidater in the policy direction:  a. Firstly I would like the capacity as symmetry as supposed to the folioning guidater in the policy direction is the more capac
Barry	S.	Ontario British	unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  A Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a discinction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way !  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which their to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms or broadcasting undertakings";  b. "e
Barry	S.	Ontario British	unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.  A Lasty, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes for beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's 8 minust has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which threst to limit this through government regulation is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as diraconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submittion my comments on the Order Issuing Diractions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the billowing guidance in the policy direction:  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the billowing gu
Barry	S.	Ontario British	unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  A Latkly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way !  The internet with it's plus's 8 minus's hab become a vehicle for fire speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in rature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  It would not be imposing it's restrictions on incardar, it am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Fratyl, would list to express my strong support for the fellowing guidance in the pol
Barry	S.	Ontario British	unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.  A Lasty, I urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing: this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's & minus's hab become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this strough government regulation: is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 imposes a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  I would hope you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Frasty, would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction or in respect of programs of social media creators';  a. emplementing discover
Barry	S.	Ontario British	unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  A Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a discretion to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 intally was to nequire large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plus's 8 minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The implementation of C-11 inhould apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on non-profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on individual creative content - of any kind.  If C-11 myoses a series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be either changed or cancelled over time, a various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as draconian in nature!  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidy and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I - Texty, I would like to express my strong support for the floring guidarce in the policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidy and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I -
Barry	S.	Ontario British	unambiguoubly, so we don't loise access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure far and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feetback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am authmitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news terms they were sharing - this bill as written goes for beyond this - and NOT in a positive way !  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The internet with it's plus's & minus's has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The internet with it's plus's
Barry	S.	Ontario British	unantispously, so we don't box access to these services.  A. Lasty, Lurge the inclusions of a direction to save fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  It trust you will be service the consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major scope of C-11 initially was to require large on line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond the - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with E a place's A minust has become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which tries to limit this through government regulation - is much less of a democracy,  The implementation of C-11 should apply to large profit-based on-line corporations ONLY. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It should not be impossing its restrictions on mon-profit entities. It
Barry	S.	Ontario  British Columbia	unambiguously, so we don't box access to these services.  4. Lasty, Turp the includion of a direction to examinate in the equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. That you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major accept of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond the - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with Es place's its mixed is become a vehicle for free speech. Any country which trees to limit this through government regulation is in much less of a democracy.  The internet with Es place's its mixed is the place of the place of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes far beyond the - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with Es place's its mixed is the place of the pla
Barry	S.	Ontario  British Columbia	unambiguously, so we don't bee exercise.  A careful contains a direction or a dir
Barry	S.	Ontario  British Columbia	unambiguously, so we don't bee exercise.  Labyl, Yunge had relation of a direction content or included an expensive formation of production of a direction consideration.  I'vit vay we list also my behalds into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the major acque of C 11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes for beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The internet with it's plan's & minors has become a vehicle for five speech. Any country which trees to limit the through government regulation - is much less of a democracy.  The information of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items they were sharing - this bill as written goes for beyond this - and NOT in a positive way!  The information of C-11 initially was to require large on-line services to pay for news items that you were the production - is much less of a democracy.  I'vit is implementation of minor the production of the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as directions in much less of a democracy.  If C 11 mappeas series of highly-restrictive demands, it will surely be other changed or cancelled over time, as various other governments come into power. If you want the implementation of this to stand over time - it can't be seen as directions in much less of the production
Barry	S.	Ontario  British Columbia	usantisposoh, so we don't beise services. In these services.  Labyl, turnel feed includion of affection to incende or a desiration to make the equally evalidle to all Cardidin online creators, no matter when they done the creation in the equally evalidle to all Cardidin online creators, no matter when they done the creation in the equally evalidle to all Cardidin online creators, no matter when they done the creation in the equally evalidle to all Cardidin online creators, no matter when they done the creation in the equal to expend the accordance of C.11 includin was to explain from the creation in the equal to expend the accordance of C.11 includin was to explain from the creation in the equal to expend the accordance of C.11 includin was to explain from the creation in the equal to expend the accordance of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of C.11 including was to explain from the expenditure of the expenditure o
Barry	S.	Ontario  British Columbia	unambiguously, on we don't beine services.  A Lasty, urg the function of a direction to success to these services.  A Lasty, urg the function of a direction to success the second equal treatment for all Canddon online creators, no matter who choices to create.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the mejor expect of C.11 initially was to require large on rine services to pay for result stems they were sharing. This bill as written pose for larger dependency of the services of th
Barry	S.	Ontario  British Columbia	unambiguously, se we don't bead accessed in these services.  All Lasty, I urp the following of a decision for usure fine of equal treatment for all Canadian online creatures. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creatures, no matter within the properties of the promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creatures, no matter within the properties of the promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creatures, no matter within the properties of the promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creatures, no matter all the properties of the promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian ordines are considered to the properties of the promotion opportunities or determined.  While the employ only of C-11 should apply to large profit based on line corporations ONLY. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be imposing it's restrictions on man profit entities. It should not be indicated to indicate the profit entities of the profit entities. It is should not be imposing it is restricted to indicate the profit entities. It is should not be
Barry	S.	Ontario  British Columbia	unambiguously, on we don't beine services.  A Lasty, urg the function of a direction to success to these services.  A Lasty, urg the function of a direction to success the second equal treatment for all Canddon online creators, no matter who choices to create.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While the mejor expect of C.11 initially was to require large on rine services to pay for result stems they were sharing. This bill as written pose for larger dependency of the services of th

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing solar intensit users and Letter from regulator in the result of the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Barton	0.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			induct where they under the determinant of the dete
Baz	v.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social metals uses and Levelon's and user London. In control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bea	I.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
beate	d.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solding and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;" c. (the) CRCIE is directed not to impose regulator, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  CI the) CRCIE is directed not to impose regulator, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to created.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Beatrice	F.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Becky	F.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect addience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Freedom of speech is part of our charter of rights and freedoms. Do not take that away from us Canadians.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Becky	K.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Lanaba, I am submitting my comments on the Uren't Issuing Directions to the LKIL (Sustainable and Equitable proadcasting Regulatory Pramework). While I appreciate the draft
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Finally, small not for profits will also be affected negatively. The media is able to assist small charities in the sharing of press releases and charity events, to be able to reach a much larger audience than the charity alone would. Without this option, small charities will lose a large chunk of their potential reach.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Beki	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c) the   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Bekkah	В.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
веккап	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Belinda	c.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Belinda	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Belinda	W.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ben	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose resultatory requirements no nnilne undertakinos in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ben	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience orboic eand, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ben	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing duscreleaving provision in a Wey data: Immilitizes use read to desire algorithms of industrials of the control of the desired provision of the control of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ben	E.	British Columbia	I am providing my opinion on the CRTC's Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework. I'm asking you to strengthen the draft policy direction's commitments in the final version.
			1. I would like to express my powerful support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions that minimize the neet to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
			c. [the] CNCTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings regarding programs of social media creators"; d. and the CNTC directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available." 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration. CRTC-directed changes should be voluntary and optional.
			3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. We must set limits on online activities, so we do not lose access.  4. In conclusion, I urge you to include a direction to ensure equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. All Canadian online creators should benefit equally from Bill C-11.
Ben	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benhur	A.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Inspirationally social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(") respect adultione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final expension of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to escales an unserse are vices.  4. In the inclusion of a direction of a direction to essure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benjamin	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Inspirationally social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CKTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benjamin	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benjamin	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available?  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To further subspicient free commitments of intervibility to intervibe and expression, it is official rules for expression in the policy direction leads of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requisited, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benjamin	0.	d and Labrador

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (t. the") "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Daniamin	м.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benjamin	141.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am insisting that you solidify and improve these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. I love Canadian content, and strongly believe that it should be promoted, and the best way to do this is to make it visible, but voluntary. Sell it; don't force it. Any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. Boosting visibility of Canadian content is excellent, but if it is force-fed to people, they will, as a matter of human nature, avoid it.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Any content that is removed, for any reason, should be done so in a transparent way, so that the public not only knows which content was removed, but has access to a detailed reason as to why. Vague explanations, such as "harmful content" are unacceptable, and will provide multiple opportunities for abuse, which would ultimately undermine the public's faith in its institutions (and for good reason).
			6. Finally, I insist that any algorithm put into place by this ruling, or which was already in place prior to said ruling, be made open-source. Doing so will ensure that Canadian programmers, and content creators, can see exactly how our online activity is being curated. Such action would not only solidify Canadians' faith in their institutions, but it would also allow for more efficient improvements to future algorithms, and minimize harmful censorship. We have an extremely capable and educated population. It would be foolish not to make the best use of their skills.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benjamin	М.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation ",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Benoit	В.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
belluit	ь.	Quenec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Benoit	М.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users and optional and optional control and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Benoit	В.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from resolutation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernadette	G.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernadette	В.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concension in Landaca, a fasting you to support you comments on the User Ligustanapole and Equitative processing, and asking you to support you comment to the User Ligustanapole and Equitative processing Regulatory Framework), while I appreciate the orant
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			<ul> <li>excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;</li> <li>(Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernadette	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insular where they disclose to Cease. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernadette	М.	Alberta	As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "INTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lastry, 1 big the filteritation of a function to discuss rain and equal oranization of an Canadian formittee there they choose to create the choice for canadian control or the control of the control
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Thank you for listening.
Bernadette	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernard	P.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernard	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding oscial media users and preators and their content from renulation."  social media users and preators and their content from renulation."
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernard	Υ.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
District of		0.1.1.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. the 'CRT' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and ht 'CRT' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and ht 'CRT' is directed to 'Cycl respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available';
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bernard	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Bernie		Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
bernie		Quenec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y neurine so nonline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastby, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernie	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social medial creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bernie	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and all "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and all "CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bert	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Berte	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy' expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bertha		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Beth	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting inty comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Beth	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Detii	5.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "XRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Betty	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id induced not impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
betty	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Betty	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "NETI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Betty	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
L		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Betty	S.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		D. 111.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Betty	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		N . 6 II	matter where they choose to create.
Bev	L.	d and Labrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bev	L.	d and Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable provisions in a way that the support of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT's difference for for respect audigninger solvies and, where possible, increase the options are available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bev	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed to to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Beverley	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a "implementing of the algorithms of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. Lastry, Turge the inclusion of a direction of ensure rail and equal dedicient of an Canadian online deators. Any maintain or promotion opportunities deated by an C-11's implementation must be equally available to an Canadian online deators, nor matter where they choose to create on the control of the c
Beverley800 9612	В.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CKIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Beverly	Υ.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c_[the] "CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d, and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect underined crothics and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Beverly	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. especially "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resultated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
L .		L	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Beverly	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet to arter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bianca	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bill	R.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bill	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bill	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
L	Ļ	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect, adulatine co-toice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty, Tulpe to Efficiation to discuss that an equal steatment for an Calculation similar steady symmetric devices to reach the symmetric devices the symm
0.11		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BIII	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction censure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matchy further control of the control
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BILL	Υ.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] C'NTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it is like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online a learning through the product of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bill	G.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "fol' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
bill	b.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding Social media uses and creations and user content norm regulatory. The content is content to the content of the co
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.
			4. Lasty, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Bill	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	Ĭ.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bill	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implemention discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British Columbia

Second Continued Continu				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
Part   Company				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Building Control Con				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".
See August 1 and 1				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Language of the Common and the Common and American American And American Am				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
A Lander of Land				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Part				- "
Section   Company   Comp				matter where they choose to create.
As a research control of Color I. In the control of the color of the c	Dill	D	Vukon	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Has companied to the companied of the co	Dill	Б.	TUKUII	As a concerned person in Canada, I am moved to support complete opposition of this governments undertakings with respect to restricting freedom of speech or expression in any form; including the implementation of Bill C-11 your efforts to force free people to bend to comply with government approved propagational and intercourse we will inevitably be ment with your due reward.
Have been been been been been been been be				It is a very small mind indeed that thinks the Internet and Public Broadcasting have anything in common in terms of propagation or public engagement. The CRTC has no experience to provide (government guided) oversight of the rights for Canadians
Test organization in Franch Principle Seaged in Franch Principle Seaged in Test Seaged in the Seaged Seaged in Seaged Seaged in Seaged i March 1975   Section
Part
Service Communication of the c				You are leading Canada to ruin.
As a successor power in Control, 1 to a controlling on common on the four Control (Control and				Please STOP this nonsense.
I. Tegy, 1 and 16 to a gaptor or years group group for the Management of the Manag	Bill	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Teacing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online secression. I am addition and submitting the production of the production o
Services of the control of the contr				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
and and the CRIT confidence being required authors and such with the proposed process and the process of the control of the co				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
In extracting our gliptomic bases in term, and any CTU districts changes in the out of the qualitation and the many and and any companies on the districts in the appropriate of the companies and of classified in the districts in the appropriate of the companies and of classified in the districts in the appropriate of the companies and of classified in the companies of the compa				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
uniformized by an earth for accessory of the Storing of Section Confederation and Section Confederation Confeder				<ol> <li>To further strengther seconditional to usernition to individual C-direct and expression, it is crucial the final version do let the policy direction to use a disposition and support of the policy direction to use and support of the policy direction to use and support of the policy direction to use a disposition and support of the policy direction to use a disposition and support of the policy direction and support of the policy direction to use a disposition and support of the policy direction and support of the pol</li></ol>
Indicates where they detune to consistent of the control of the co				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dainty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
The stay own will talk my reflects the consideration.  If the stay own will talk my reflects the consideration of the Child I basing Decisions on the Child I				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As concerned earner in Cauda, 1 am aphaneting on growmaste on the Chart Excellent and Septiable Broadcasting Regulators (N. White 1 approaches the clark principles of the control of the pools to onlive expression. I am authory one to surface any surface of the first or surface and the surface was required for the first required.  1. Institute, and the time are surface and the surface was required for the first required for the surface and the surface was required for the first required for the surface and the surface was required for the surface and the surface	billee-jean	m.	Ontario	As a parameter of the property
a. "mylementing decorations for the content of the				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
c (ba) CCIC o director and to exposure projectory registering regi				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
be whately and optioned is users like me, and my GTC characted charges in lower colors algorithms work should be me charges services and officended. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of minim undertaileng clearly and A. Lath, 1 ray the lockboar of a direction to easier for all Canadian online creatures. As a concerned the late policy decidence of a direction to easier for all Canadian online creatures. As a concerned free by chose to correct the late policy available to all Canadian online creatures. As a concerned finding many in Canadia. In an admittage my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Substantials and Equation Provided Canadian online creatures. As a concerned finding many in Canadia. In an admittage my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Substantials and Equation Provided Canadian online creatures. In a submittage of the control				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Line concerned that the goldy districtive less in clarky on which nevices should be regulared, and raise draining sensel and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate copie of online undertakings dearly and samples, only on each of the samp cases of those services.  4. Lably, 1 unit the includes of a direction to assess for seal canadam online crusters. Any financial or promotion opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters. Any financial or promotion opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters. Any financial or promotion opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters. Any financial or promotion opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters.  An opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters. The control opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters. The control opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters. The control opportunities crusted by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadam online crusters. The control opportunities are control on the control opportunities and control on the control opportunities and control opportunities crusters. The control opportunities are control opportunities and control opportunities crusters. The control opportunities and control opportunit				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should Leading Large the inclusion of extreme to excess to these envices.  4. Leady, Large the inclusion of extreme for and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BII C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.  To vary one or the table in process to read.  As a concerned from gen* in Canada, I man administry my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  1. In any agent all authorists may be provided in the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  1. In any agent all authorists may be provided in this or defined to exceed the control of the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  2. In a control of the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  3. In control of the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  4. Early (CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  5. Exception Committee of the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  6. Exception Committee of the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  6. Exception Committee of the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  7. Exception Committee of the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  8. In concerned that the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  8. In concerned that the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  8. In concerned that the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  8. In concerned that the CRIX (Statemable Producestring Producestring Regulatory Framework).  8. In concerned that the CRIX (Statemable and Equatable Producestring Regulatory Framework).  8. In concerned that the CRIX (Statemable Producestring Producestring Regulatory Framework).  8. In concerne Interference where they drove to create.  The tay you that has my feedback into consideration.  The control of
As a concerned "Twing man" in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  1.1 am against all authorisation power gradery control. This is no different. Everything the Canadian government statement of each act with one Project and authorisation power gradery control. This is no different. Everything the Canadian government statement of each act with one Project and Canadian government approached bedone with source and the Canadian government approached bedone with a control.  2. a adulta the nate of allow against man of moderation and account of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  3. b exclude door solid account of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  4. a adulta the nate of allow against man of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  5. CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  8. The my feedback not considerable on the impact against man of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  8. The my feedback not considerable on the impact against man of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I agreecate the draft policy direction size than not the control of CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I agreecate the draft policy direction size during the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I agreecate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pound to the expension of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I agreecate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pound to the control of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I agreecate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pound to the policy direction is the Equi				matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned froing man' in Canada, I am admitting my comments on the Order Essaing Directions to the CREC (Sustainable and Equitable Enradicating Regulatory Framework).  1.1 am agenesis all authorities move greated control. This is no effered, because providing the government quality and provided in this agenda are selected providing the government general general government to the control of access to information. We see what you are trying to do, all envolved in this agenda are treaters to our country, also an enemy of Man. Do better, mind your own houses and government general general government general gove	Billy	z.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my Heoback into consideration.
the government approximate approximate that document approximate approximate profession and control follow while descriptions were obsorbed according undertakings and abovernment of the provided provided to the provided and the
a. Abolish the needs to after algorithms of Proschedings b. excised acid mode users (radios and thirt counted from regulation) b. excised acid mode users (radios and thirt counted from regulation) c. (the) YCTC is directed not to impose regulation yregimenests on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) YCTC is directed not to impose regulation yregimenests on social and process of the counter of the process of the				the government agencies/ bad actors whom are trying to dictate our content/ access to information. We see what you are trying to do, all involved in this agenda are traitors to our country, also an enemy of Man. Do better, mind your own business and
c. Itely CRTC is directed ont to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators?  d. the CRTC is directed to (1) respect address challed.  2. Strengthen commitments to individual choical, expression, a direction that rules out. alignments alignment and a promoting or accessing Canadian content should be voluntary/ optional to users like me, any CRTC-directed challed to the challed on the choices whether or not to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the CRTCs direction lacks clarify, and risks driving services out of Canada.  4. Lasky, J. Germand in notices direction, ensuring fair and equal treatment for all Canadian's online. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Take my feedback into consideration.  Take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online appreciately provideration in a way that minimizes the need to alter apportunities of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online appreciation providers in a way that minimizes the need to alter apportunities of the CRTC of direction of the propriet of the CRTC of direction of the propriet of the propriet appreciate the draft policy direction is controlled to the control of the propriet of the propriet appreciate the draft policy direction control of the propriet of the propriet appreciate the				a. abolish the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings
2. Strengther, commitments to included charge for some single diere choose whether or not make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the CRTC is directed by an analysis of the CRTC directed changes for how miles agreement to the CRTC directed changes for how miles agreement to the CRTC directed changes for how miles agreement to the CRTC directed of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable for adapting methods and in the CRTC is directed for () respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the policy direction of the policy direction must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where the commitment is not a conservation of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable for adapting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks and the contract regulators. It is a contract agreement to consideration.  1. I replacementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to allow a direction of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable for adapting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all canadian online creators," in a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all realizations of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable for adapting in the CRTC is directed for () respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments in enders of provisions of the policy direction is on a create the policy direction is an ordinary and optional to users like may and any CRTC directed danges to how milities algorithm soft should be true.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction is desired and provided choice and expression, it is considerable.  4. Lastly, I use the links late of policy direction is considerable.  5. Ontario  8. I'm tay way will alse my feedback into consideration.  8. I'm tay way will alse my feedback into consideration.  8. I'm tay w				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the CRTC's direction lacks clarify , and risks driving services out of Canada. 4. Lastly, I clamand an inclusive direction, ensuring fair and equal treatment for all Canadian's online. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choiced for create.  Take my feedback into consideration.  Take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sistainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks post of nonline expression, I am asking you to scillatly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:  2. In register that the commendation of the policy direction is a "implementing discoverability provision in any but the minimals the need to later sportship of provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all exportships of provisions in a way that minimizes the need to all exportships of provisions and that the CRTC is directed to 10'c longous regulatory registering of cold intelligence in the policy direction in a way that minimizes the need to all commendations, and that the CRTC is directed to 10'c longous characteristics of incidental to 10'c longous the need to 10°c longous the ne				2. Strengthen commitments to individual choice/ expression, a direction that rules out algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting or accessing Canadian content should be voluntary/ optional to users like me, any CRTC-directed
4. Lastly), I demand an inclusion direction, ensuring fair and equal treatment for all Canadian's online. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Take my feedback into consideration.  7. Ontario  7. Ontario  8. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to children commitments in the final development of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to children the commitments in the final direction of the policy direction's a major provision in a way that minimizes the rised to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  8. In contracting the contraction of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the contraction of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the contraction of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the contraction of a microbic or address to the contraction of a direction of a direction or the policy direction's efforts to address the risks of the voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  8 If you was death to policy direction to result a fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or
Take my feedback into consideration.  7. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like the openess my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increases the options available." 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, i. i. is crucial that the final creators of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction loss carries on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. Ontario  As a concerned parson in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. F				4. Lastly, I demand an inclusive direction, ensuring fair and equal treatment for all Canadian's online. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter
Billy Joe T. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTT (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction of the production
posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following updication:  2. The presenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  3. The presenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  3. In presenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  3. The first of first of the CRTC is directed to first possible, increase the options available.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks can'ty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lataly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the first levels.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Solid and the concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following qualidator, in the final version of the policy direction risks out across-the-board algorithm alteration entire	Billy Joe	T.	Ontario
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet to after agorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [Phi "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on confine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on confine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "to", or pract and objective choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how confidence whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2 trust, you will take my feedback into consideration.  3 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  4 a concerned person in Canada, 1 am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. It is cr				As a connection person in canada, I am submitting my cumining in the Order Issuing Directions of the UKIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
c. (the) CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators*; d. and that the CRTC is directed to C(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  8 As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression; I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. I'm further all the policy direction and the policy direction is the policy direction is of programs of social media creators*;  3. I'm concerned make the policy of introductal choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Thr. concented that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  8irju S. Ontario  S. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the rough (pricetions: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the neet of participations," b. 'excluding social media acceptable," c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect caudience choice and hyber possible, of the choose whether to make use of them.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression,				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Birju S. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments to in the policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments to in the policy direction on a "Imprementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizate the need to alter algorithms in the final version.  2. I'm firstly, I'm would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction and an available.  3. The concerned may apply the possible, increase the options available.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Ontario  S. Ontario  Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  2. Inplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  4. In present the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  5. In further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the i				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Birju S. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directionics.  a. "Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of the condocating undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and expression, it is evident on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and expression, it is evident on undertaking and political responsible increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is evident on undertaking sclearly and be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concented that the policy direction lacks deathy on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
S. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of in roadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. I they "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements to mortaline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concenned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the CMTE (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of roadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. Tor further commend that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.	Dieiu	c	Ontari-	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation", c. [the] 'CRI'C is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how call adjointhms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.	Jii ju	٥.	JII.ai IU	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concented that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				<ul><li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li></ul>
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. British British
	Bjorn	Α.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Lastly, STOP TELLING US WHAT WE WANT! STOP FORCING US TO CONSUME WHAT YOU SAY!! WE WILL NOT COMPLY!!!
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blackie	N.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blaine	В.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Newfoundlan	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blair	S.	d and Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," co., (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Blair	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blair	м.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. It has "CREAT to discrete do to timose regulation view under the content from regulation view of the content view of the co
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blair	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(f) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blaire	S.	British Columbia	A dash you mit dane my resource, mor unclassification.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blake	В.	Quebec	As a concerned according to a constraint of the Control of the Con
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Blake	E.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blake	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blane	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from requiation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Blythe	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dairly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unantihinustly. So we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Во	T.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing uscored annity provision in a way that, immilizes the reted to a detail algorithms or troubleading in the second provision of the content from the provision of the content from
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 3.1 in Concentration to the Diphic ynetrocol nucleosate by our waste as a contract the second of the
			matter where they choose to create.
bob	d.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bob	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation yr requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Bob	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bob	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bob	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Bob	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
500	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to 1'c injourneements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bob	T.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from preliation".
			b. excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation;     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
вов	K.	Saskatchewa n

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bob	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolution".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bob	A.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express ystrong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on inline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bob	U.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I am already very unhappy with the amount of commercial interference in 'net searches, and given the cozy relationship of corporations with many politicians, I have no hope for added "Can-Con" filters being a net good. If you want to promote Canadian Content, give subsidies to those who produce it. I'd be pretty loose with small grants, rather than trying to focus on more CBC and similar ventures, which inevitably wind up being compromised by politics and local empire-builders.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bob	S.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
hoh	_	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JUD	1.	Vineirg	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     b. "excluding social media users and creators and them."
			b. Excluding Social metals also all out sources in the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
bobby	b.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			4. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To full the strengthen to the commissions to moving choice and expression, it is cloud that the mind version of the planty intercont reads on a cross-the-board approximal activation entirely. Any measures annea at promoting Caracular Contents Should be evolutionary and optional to users like me, and any CET-directed changes to how online algorithms work should left me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Boguslaw	P.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and wheir content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bojan	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bonita	L.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bonnie	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy l'expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bonnie	м.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the? "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy le respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bonnie	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and where content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			to. Excluding social mental users and creators and user content from regulation respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the logic function lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inamininarity, on we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bonnie	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bonnie	S.	Alberta

			As a processor in Canada. Lam submitting my commonte on the Order Ironina Directions to the CETT (Surbinable and Franklik). Proceedings from the CETT (Surbinable and Franklik).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding social medical bases and clearly said their Content from regulation;  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bonnie	T.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bonnie	М.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a Canadian citizen, I am forwarding comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. I would like to express my strong support for the following     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional. Any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The policy direction is unclear on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don' t lose access to these services.  4. A direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators needs to be included. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Bonnie	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Boudreault	Υ.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding social media basis and clearly said unter Content from regulation;  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			I am concerned that the government will "manage" searches similarly to China filtering
Boyd	R.	Ontario	out "Tiananmen Square", and targeting the searcher.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from redulation".
			D. exclusing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;     C [the] "CRT6 is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	к.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	m	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", second my social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC* is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators*; d. and in CRTC* is directed to Circ* regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators*; d. and in CRTC* is directed to Circ* regulatory requirements on online undertakings with regulators available*.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	D.	Ontario	a trust you will take my recuback more dissociation.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user is like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	P.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	D.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Excluding social metale uses a nit elements and references from regulation /,  (E the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brad	1.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brad		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DIAU	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not be impose regulator yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brad	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks noted to noting expression. I am action you to solidify and enhance those commitments in the final version.
			Does to Gilline Expression, I am asking you to Solidary and enhance these communities in the lines version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BRADLEY	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bram	B.	Ontario

			As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy c
			1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Branden	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
branden	11.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandi	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengther ecommitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out a rule of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be under the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration rules out across-the-board algorithm.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insue whee due to ceae.  It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandon	R.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," content from the content of the content from regulation, and the content of the content from regulation, and the second content of the content from regulation, and the content from regulation, and the content from regulation, and the content from regulation in regulation in regulation, and the regulation is required to the regulation of the regulation in regulation in regulation in regulation, and regulation is required to the regulation of the regulation in regulati
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brandon	н.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I strate I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the noticy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brandon	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	Ī	2210	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on orline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brandon	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandon	G.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the *CRTC is directed to *Cy createst cauleince choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to usees like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandon	E.	Ontario	LUGS you win take my recuback into Consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation"; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandon	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] 'CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the KCTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			* days from the choice to create.
Daniel .	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandy	Б.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [this] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect underence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandy	м.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brand:	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brandy	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks consect to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Branimir	S.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy, direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Branislava	D.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverbility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brayden	S.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," or content from regulations, content from
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brea	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Inspirationally social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Breanna	C.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
brenda	h.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," (c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brenda	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metal sets and it clearly and in the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. So we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brenda	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brenda	J.	Alberta	atter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Concrision person in Liahaba, 1 and support in Liahaba, 1 and sup
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [.the] "CRIS" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brenda	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brenda	K.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [thei] "CRT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. O'utulities schedigliche et europe in der
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brenda	V.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As additional personal, I am adding you to solution ground the commission of the desired that the first version of
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 in Conceiled that the plotsy unlessed tasks dainy of micros tasks dainy of micros access to these services.  3.1 in Conceiled that the plotsy unlessed tasks dainy of micros access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brenda	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I don't appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. This amounts to censorship and nothing more. Who is to decide what is good vs bad? Unless someone is personally being threatened, there should be no problem. Merely being offended or having someone take a different viewpoint is NOT in any way grounds to have things censored. Take the recent look at banning Fox News. A small group was the Call them to change the channel, There is no reason to ban it. Similarly, where is no reason to be not included. That's all. I still see things online that I feel should be offended. I see a hate towards bewer all the time. No no seems to bat an eye about that. I scroll on, as the rest should do too. But if you go after one, you have to go after them all. The problem today is far too many are overlooked because they play into an agenda. That's just wrong, Its unjust, and unfair and it certainly is not free speech or freedom of expression.  I want the government to stay away from all of this.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user is like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brenda	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. "Insularmating discoverability, provisions in supplying the minimization of the property and the property
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brendan	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks according to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks according to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brendan		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
prendan	G.	MIDELLA

			As a concerned operan in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Ironium Ricording to the CRIT (Surbhiable and Fullable Readmin Resolution Formation).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brenna	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I enough dike to express my strong support for the following culdinative states and the support for the suppor
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [[he] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brennan	Р.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brennan	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brent	f.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brent	Р.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am askino you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			as - implementing discretioning provision in a way dista immiliates the need of site augustums of note
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brent	C.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brent	W	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			<ul> <li>Libel "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" esspect, audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			use voluntary and optional or users like mile, and any Cut Cutteract clanges on two vinine algorithms work should be the included the mile of the conservation of the clans of the conservation of the clans of the c
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brent	E.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", t. "[the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the choice of the choi
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brent	D.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' esspect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brett	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brett	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from the properties of the pr
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. d. and "tat ReTC is directed to "(c)" expect audiomete choice and, where possible, increase the options available". d. d. "d. "CRTC is directed to "(c)" expect audiomete choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brett	P.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brett	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	D.	Nova Scotia

			As a processed agree in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Israina Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Similable Susdayable S
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that innimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a consistent of the provisions o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brian	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not be impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators." d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy pictor is access to these services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	s.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [] thei "CRTL's directed not to impose regulation yr requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 3.1 in Concerned that the policy direction because carry of mining several should be regulated, and last during shall also driving shall an incide location several shall be required to the policy of the control of th
			matter where they choose to create.
Brian	B.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	F.	Ontario	As a pageoned page of in Canada I am submitting my commonte on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilibria) and Equilibria Propagation Deputation Francisco to the destination of effects to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks drivino small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brian	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
впап	M.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing Social metal users and treators and user content norm regulation;  C [the] "CRTs directed not be impose regulatory requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brian	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	C.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			pose to training expression, I am asking you o solonly and emanted tress commitments in mice many version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the roll of the properties of the pr
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brian	м.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DIIdii	Ph.	FIGURIE	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a ney that minimizes the need to after algorithms of troadcasting undertakings*; b. The "CRT's discoverability provisions in a ney that minimizes the need to after algorithms of troadcasting undertakings*; b. The "CRT's discoverability provisions in a new that makes the need to after a new that the need to after a need to after a new that the need to after a new that the need to after a need t
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	н.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases to the COTO (Contribute Diseases) and Society of the Coto Contribute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Institute Diseases of Canada Law submitted Diseases
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BRIAN	S.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned access in Canada I are submitting museumments on the Order Issuine Directions to the CPTC (Surthinghlo and Equiphlo Residenting Resultance Example All Mills I approximate the draft policy directions of effect to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "Implementing discoverability of the provisions of the provisio
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	В.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "southaling early ment and resolve and their general from possible to the provisions of the provisi
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	В.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the provision of the provisi
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulator yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
brian	m.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNRT is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators", d. and that the CRT is directed to "[C] respect audionice choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BRIAN	S.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "TRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brian	l.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brian	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and when content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'to' (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. If m concent that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		British	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and helf content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerning to the control in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic these commitments or the United States of the City Control in Expression in Landaa, I am sking you to solidify and mehanic the City Control in
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2: 10 interesting the users like me, and or control of the control
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	н.	Ontario	Litus, you will cake my recuback more discontinuous.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"].
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version:
			Withdraw this programme and let the marketplace of lete. For any activities and let consumers regulate the content by their use of it. Interference in human expression, like any other "fine" system and any other some consists and interfliencies and is ultimately less of a currective than a few marketplace of lete. For any activities, also existed, also existed in the source of
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BRIAN	В.	Ontario	As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the indixing gludance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "In CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options wailed by the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. This is extremely important, as imposition of changes by the CRTC without the option to disable them, would severely undermine my ability to consume content I desire without undue influence by the Government of Canada.
			3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and riche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. Failure to do so will simply lead users like me to use VPNs to all ror upgarent location to access services we deem important to us. This further degrades Canadian content, because it won't be displayed alongside other content if a VPN is used to alter apparent location.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that I was CRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that I was CRTC is directed to require control end, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BRIAN	T.	Ontario	I believe it is better for Canada and its citizens to encourage development of a population of adults, with adult minds, who can entertain differing points of view and, with a critical reasoning logical mind, decide for themselves what is valid for them and what is not, as opposed to pandering to a population of adults with weak child-minds that must be spoonfed populist propaganda the government wishes to promote, and be protected from ideas that question and challenge conventional thinking.
			Freedom of ideas and expression is central to what it means to be a Canadian. We need freedom to discuss our concerns and to have hearty discussion about alternative options and direction forward.
			Please respect our values and do the job with which you have been entrusted and promote freedom of expression, respectful exchange of ideas and intelligent discussion in Canada. We have lost too already, particularly with the idiocy and hysteria that prevailed over the last 3 years, regarding subjects that could have been handled far more intelligently and effectively. Today, we need free speech and lively discussion more than ever.
			Please stand up, speak up, and allow other Canadians to do so the same freely.
			Thanks you,
			Brian G
			A list of specific issues, with which I agree, continues below  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	G.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I have worked in radio broadcasting my whole career and in general, I ask that the CRTC's role in regulating our affairs be cut back not expanded.
			1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't loss excess to these services.
			4. Last, I urge the elimination of financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	R.	Manitoba Saskatchewa
brian	t.	n	I am not in favor of Bill C-11. It simply shows how corrupt and communist the Trudeau government really is.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Q' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no match where victors to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	D.	Alberta	As a second agree in Create 1, the submittee must appropriate to the Order Ensire Disording to t
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no +. Lasty, Tuge to initiation or a the cutor or ensure ran and equal destinent or an canadian online deators, normalized or promotion opportunities deated by an C-115 imperientation must be expany available to an canadian online deators, normalized when considerable of considerable or ensure.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  — excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  — b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the]: CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CKTC is directed to CYC prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  d. d
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			* distry. They be included to a distriction of a district
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brian	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter winer uney ulores to treate.  I trust vo will take my feetback into consideration.
Brianna	F.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CNT is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brianna	В.	British Columbia	I urge a thorough consideration of the voices of all Canadians, both those individuals and organizations posting content, and those choosing content. I feel Canadians can regulate and make decisions about content on our own and am concerned about government agencies acreeming content or changing algorithms to push certain content. It is inevitable that Canadians will disapre on issues but freedom of thought and speech is a necessity in a free nation, as is demonstrated in nations where these rights have been preded. Being a member of the free global world to do not feel we should inhibit global content. Exploring and learning about other peoples and cultures is one of the reasons we sought and utilize the internet and modern media. I feel Canadian creators will produce even better content if there remains competition for audiences. The number of viewers provides feedback as to what Canadian audiences want and without it being on a global stage I feel they may become complacent.  "Forcer I mass content" will not be eniovable on in the periorable of the perio
			I understand the need for some regulatory policies, but freedom of thought, expression and speech should be the priority. If ideological content conflicts then that is actually going to be a truer picture of what Canadians thinkthe reality is not all Canadians think alike, and opposition is actually helpful to keep us all in check, no matter which side of the scale we fall on. If some Canadians choose a smaller independent media source then so be it. They should have that choice and opportunity just like those that wish to continue with mainstream.
			If some canadiens choose a smaller independent menia source time so be it. I ney should have that choice and opportunity just like those that wish to continue with mainstream.  By restricting certain online media or sources it will just create even more division as many Canadians will feel left out by centralist government. This is the time we should be engaging and listening, not shutting down conversations because we automatically hate those we disagree with.
			It is becoming quite discouraging. Let's keep freedom and respect the message we agree on because we know not all Canadians are going to agree on all issues. What is popular and acceptable now may not be 50 years from now even. Who knows!
Brigid	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brigitte	K.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(") cryespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Brigitte	C.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRT cs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT cs directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brigitte	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations from regulations or content from regulations
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter when they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brigitte	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual Choice and expression, it is crucial shart the final version different in cultivation and control of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be the choose of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brittany	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRRT is directed to '(')(') respect a undernote choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  d. 'Respect to the contraction of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brittany	L.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			b. exclusing social measurements users and underson state that control in the con
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brittney	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Brittney	0.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Brittney	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
BROOKE		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BROOKE	L,	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory regulatory and only increases the options available". d. and that the CRTC is directed to "to" increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bruce	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			to. Exactions seem and extension and uner-content norm regulation;  (Ethel) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'to' /crespect adulence choice and, where obssible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lastly, Turgle definitions or a direction defisite fail and equal dedinent for an Canadian online deators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evuluring social media users, and rearbors and their content from regulation".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	R.	Ontario

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "O' (respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bruce	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Druce		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be repulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		L	natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do to niline expression, I am asking you to solition and enter these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "evulution social media issess and reators and their nontent from regulation";  h. "evulution social media issess and reators and their nontent from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	D.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  I have already seen YouTube change my otherwise visibility in the State by 3/4 and it is hurting my viewership immensely. Where my audience was 40% and my Canadian audience was 58%. It has dropped to 10% and Canada is 90% and my viewership is down significantly because YouTube is no longer offering my videos to the US.
			C. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	W.	Quebec	As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I was disappointed that a Bill such as C-11 was proposed and passed, as I support freedom of speech, regardless of whether I agree with the speech or not, and this Bill has the real potential to censor speech. Having said that, this is where we are, so I will address the draft policy direction.
			While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version as follows:
			1. I would like to express my support for the following guidance in the policy direction: (i) "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			(ii) "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; (iii) that the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and (iv) that the CRTC is directed to "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	D.	Ontario	Yours truly, Bruce D
Didec	5.	Ontario	Following is the submission of my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, however, as a Canadian citizen, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and finether content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			to. Excluding such multi-users and return with regulation, "  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. I neither want, nor need, the state to tell me what content I do or do not want to consume.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. This is critical.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bruce	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy [respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	K.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [d] and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BRYAN	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	z.	Ontario

			As a concepted person in Canada. Lam submitting my composits on the Order Insulan Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Envisible Personal Devisible Personal Devis
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
BRYAN	C.	Ontario	As a programed program in Canada . Law submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equitable Programments on the Canada and Associated the death policy directions of Great to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bryan	U.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	к.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "c) respect a underince choice and, where possible, increase the options availables"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators"; d. "excluding socia
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	J.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Exclusing social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /,  c. thei "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininusly, so we don't here acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	к.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bryan	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryan	к.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (°) crespect audience choice and whee possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bryanne	w.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryce	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "I CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the optons available."  (and "I CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the optons available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Bryce	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 m Control that the policy circicol facts carry of minor services snounce regulated, and racs driving small and nicre toreign services out or Lanada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, but edon't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Bryce	F.	Columbia	I'm concerned & I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Deibiel	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
DT		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			us and unit of the Control of the Co
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 in Contembed that the ploicy circitoria labox clarify of wines services snown be regulated, and risks driving shall and niche toreign services out or Canada. Ine mail direction must denne the appropriate scope or online uncertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these excess to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Buffy	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to () respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Buntep	C.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
bulltep	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Byron	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Byron	Н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			SCAPA AND DO AWAY WITH THIS BILL AND C-18. BOTH GIVE JUSTIN TRUDEAU AND HIS EEF MASTER DICTAPOWERS TO CENSOR AS IN COMMUNIST CHINA. CONTROLLING WHAT PEOPLE ARE ALLOWED TO SEE, HEAR AND COMMUNICATE WITH EACH OTHER.
			SCARA BOTH BILLS OR NEUTRALIZE THEM. SVE CANADA AND CANADIAN'S RICLIOTIS AND FREEDOMS.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Byron	М.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1 Sizzh L Justic William (Sizzh en version) and sizzh en version (Sizzh en version) and sizzh en
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed rol' (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
c	D.	Octori	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
·	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
С	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the rinal version.  1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British Columbia

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
C	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
_	141.	Colditible	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
C R	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
C.	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
C.	W.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
C. Michael	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (°) (crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Cael	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. I consider this a preservation of freedom.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and excression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cai	S.	Ontario

			As a represent parent in Charles I am submitted mus comments on the Order Insulan Directions to the COST (Sustainable and Failable Susdantine S
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caitlin	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interlatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caitlin	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the   "CRIC" is directed not to impose reculatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Caleb	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caleb	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caleb	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms with should let me do how to how whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Caleb	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. and that the CRTL's idirected by O/of reserval sudjects exclude and, where possible in processes the options available."
			a. and that the CARC is directed to (c) respect administration, where pissoner, increase are opunis available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caleb	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks as a concrise person in Calman, I am audition in Contine Over 1 stand precious to the Cive 1 standard precious of the Cive 1 standard precious of the Cive 1 standard precious of the Cive 1 standard person of the Cive
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy orienceson: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter logicity more provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter logicity more provided in the provisions of a way that minimizes the need to alter logicity more provided in the provisions of the
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be roluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Callio		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Callum	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Calvin	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Calvill		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online netrakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Calvin	N.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helfer content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Calvin	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Calvin	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy' (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Calvin	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. I want my sonic prime content excluded from the crtc,s control over Netflix and YouTube Calvin fan of Ryan boyd,s channel
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and help content from repulation";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the_) "CRIS in directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cam	В.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Concinion person, in Lankaa, 1 am Lanka
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cameron	В.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cameron	ь.	Mailituud	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cameron	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>in implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>invaculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>it he "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cameron	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cameron	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>in implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>invaculating social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>in the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cameron	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cameron	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  Please see my comments below, but in summary, I believe the internet should be an open pipe, similar to a water main. It should not be modified in any way. I, and I ALONE should choose what I see, media that I will consume and the origin of entertainment I watch and/or listen to. THE CONTENT speaks for itself.  I am in the IT industry and the historical openness of the internet is paramount. Thank you.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cameron	C.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that ] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that ] "CRTC is directed to (c) regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of the social media creators"; d. that [CRTC is directed to (c) repeat of the social media creators on the social media creators of the social media creators on t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			the voluntary and opportune to users nate, in any CALC-uncled changes on low distinct agricultures work should be the licitode wintering or of the control o
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Camille	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cumile		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cammie	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Campbell	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from explation", b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from periputation", b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from the provision of the soil content in the soil of the soil
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
camron	m.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Canada	p.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Candace	C.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			Please make the measures voluntary and optional.
			While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Candace	N.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  [d. and that the KRTC is directed "Or 'Or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Candice	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cara	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter allorations of provisions are a way that minimizes the need to alter allorations of provisions are way that minimizes are
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. that that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carey	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Carl	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carr	3.	Coldinbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", to. Exacional social metale uses and retermined the regulation, "  (E the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Carl	н.	Ontario	This Bill should have never been passing in the first place.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			0. excluding social media users an are records and mer content from regulation;     (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Carl	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carla	D.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carla	A.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C. (use) CAN'C is directed to the CRTC is directed to CPC (respect audious y requirements for white must be allowed as an area of the CRTC is directed to CPC (respect audious choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strenother these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promotino Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Carlinton	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carimton	ь.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatior yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  12. No cansorship of any, kind, and no promotion of any NeoNazi NeoMarxist and State funded politics of any kind from any political party, nor left wing gender ideologies or any kind of Trudeau or WEF, UN or other groups that have violated Canadian Sovereighty through their hate speech
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carlo	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Carlos	м.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		2	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carm	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. Ithel "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of proorans of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carmela	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(") respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CARMEN	P.	Ontario	and the second s

			As a concepted person in Canada, Lam submitting my composition to the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Establish Residential Resi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	к.	Ontario	As a concerned normal in Canada. Law pulmilities are commented in the Order Institute for the COTO (Sustainable and Equilibria) and Equilibria (Sustainable Associated to Coto (Sustainable Associated
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iniminizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  "" "sevel upon a consistent and their content form condition"."
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and retains and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect admicinacy obligations) where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	s.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooilal media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks onesed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understandings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	R.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to t'ci propse regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that imininizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. As a supporter of several highly informative independent media, I believe it is urgent that you clearly outline protections against CRTC's manipulation of content that might prioritize "CanCom" over content provided by independent sources (ironically, most but not all of which are, in fact, "Canadian.")  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	н.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3. In Conceiled tack the placy direction lack dearly of minton services should be regulated, and ross driving shall also inclining services out of calabat. The mint of minton minton defined in the propriate scope of minimal propriate scope of minton services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BIII C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I believe that "Canadian content" should compete for it's place, and as a Canadian I should be able to choose for myself. This does not make me unpatriotic, just discerning. I don't think I need a government agency to protect me from information, to influence me to make certain choices, or to narrow my view of the world to your view of the world. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	Z.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	м.	British Columbia	Bill C11 is very flawed as many of the other bills coming out of Canada these days. Our rights are slowly being eroded. You do not have Canadians concerns at heart.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Free speech "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and increase the options available". ESC how about hearing from different opinions other than the constant milk toast and fear mongering found on CBC and other Canadian stations. This is a real issue and we all know that anything that goes against the grain does not get heard.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for (ALL) Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Carol &	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carol`	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carole	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Carole	1	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carole	J.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			First and foremost, I do not understand the duplicity of this bill. Canadians are being constantly being fed information that Canadians are a post national country. This being the case, why does the government feel it is necessary to censor Canadian content creators on the internet. Canada has joined China, Russia, Syria, and North Korea in being regarded as an increasingly authoritarian nation when it comes to the internet.
			These are some of the country's most hostile to free expression.  Third, why does the government feel that the outdated CRTC is capable of handling this task? Further, why would Canadians trust the CRTC to determine what is Canadian enough? The CRTC is built on the outdated Broadcasting act. The CRTC has long him by my cost and experimental real ratio in evolutions for the State of the State
			Finally, assuming that there continues to be the will to cram the Internet into our outdated broadcasting framework please consider the following changes to the act.
			Clearly and explicitly exclude all user-uploaded content on all social media platforms from the CRTC's regulation, by removing or amending Section 4.2(2) of Bill C-11;  Drop any mandatory CanCon requirements for algorithmically generated feeds and search results. Promoted CanCon content should appear in areas of the platform users can opt into, not forced into every algorithm-assisted feed and playlist we create;
			Set a Canadian revenue threshold that clearly excludes small and niche foreign platforms from CRTC regulation;
Carole	S.	Alberta	Reward digital-first creators on equal terms to legacy media. This means instructing the CRTC to develop new CanCon standards equally accessible to small digital creators as legacy media creators, and which are entirely neutral about the platforms they choose to produce for.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and where content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carole	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Deikir !	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carolena	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. It is style mount in ever a chapters in it is unique group to the individual in the proof, where the proof is the proof is a style in the proof is
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caroline	G.	Quebec

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Caroline	B.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
curonne		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			b. excusing social menta users and creators and uner content from regulation?  (E the) "CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caroline	M.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Implementing discoveriously provisions in a very lost in minimizes use need to describe discoverious in the content from imminized use need to describe discoverious describes the content from regulation.  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the flavor in the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the vincuision of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caroline	W.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Caroline	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Carolyn	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carolyn	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me done whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 In Concerned that the planty unection labs during virtual severes should be regulated, and lass during small and incher overgine excess to the callable. The man unection must be included in the purpose score to the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			7. Classy, 1 using the first change of the control
Carolun	6	British	a usas you min unce my recovers may considered util.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As softice lay person in salinary birth collection in the collection of the collecti
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; c. (the! CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; c.
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
carolyn	m.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implemential discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CMIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Carolyn	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carolyli	r.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these committee ms, to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutionary and optional to users of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carolyn	S.	Ontario	a due you will done inly resource multi-consideration.
			Fuck off with Bill C11!!!!!!! #Overreach
CAROLYN	Q.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CHOLIN	Q.	Citario	There has been so much censorahip already, that giving more control to the CRTC is ludicrous. As a concerned person in clands, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft ploty directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms or proadcasting undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carolyn	к.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "foll respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			u. init us the Chrick is indicated by Cyrespect abusines current cells in Winner personal processing in the Christian Christia
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carolyn	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose requisements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '[C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		L	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carrie	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Carrie Ann	н.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned posterior in Consider I are culturally in the control of the Constant in the Co
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carsrn	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carsten	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online duration and another in the control of the control
			1. This type industries or expressing source and support for the following globalises in the pointy misestable.  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. Thei "CRIC is directed not to impose resultative requirements on online undertakinos in respect of programs of social media creators";  C. Thei "CRIC is directed not to impose resultative requirements on online undertakinos in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Carter	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Casey	N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cass	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (In b) *CRT to directed mot to impose regulatory requirements on online unosability in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (In b) *CRT to directed mot to impose regulatory requirements on online unosability in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (In b) *CRT to directed mot to impose regulatory requirements on online unosability in representations available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cassandra	C.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cassandra	K	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Cassie	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cat	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cat		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. ([the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. Indigenous creators especially need our support.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cat	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
catharina	n.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Catharina	В.	Alberta	About the news source, I expect to hear truth from the source of my own choice without interference or censorship from the so called Main Media.
CatridIIId	٥.	Albei (d	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Catha		Our	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Catherine	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Catherine	W.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
catherine	s.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Catherine	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Catherine	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media creators"
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Catherine	c.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Catherine	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cat'		0-4	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cathy	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. Bits under the CARC is unexpect to (C) respect adulence link, where possible, increase use updots available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cathy	K.	Alberta

			As a concepted across in Capada, Lam submitting my commonly on the Order Igning Directives to the COTO (Contributed to the Cotto).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing stoam install bases and release in the results in the results of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
cathy	s.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the provision of the provision in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a consistent of the provision of the p
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cathy	S.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  (; the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cathy	w.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". d. and that the CRCT is directed to "follower provisions" as way their provisions are specified in respect to programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "follower provisions" and their provisions are specified in the provisions are specified in the provisions and their provisions are specified in the provision are s
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cathy	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed to to timpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cc	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cecile	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cecilia	м.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Cédric	м.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
CCUTC		Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Celeste	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Celeste	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Celina	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Celyse	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ceri	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Cerrisse and	B.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chace	L.	Alberta	Control Contro
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chad	Α.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed in the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect underece choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
chad chad	d. c.	Columbia Ontario	FUCK OFF JUSTIN. YOU NEED A SWIFT KICK TO THE BAG
			As a concerned person is Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solding and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2: to furnitary and option these used in mortifact direction and expression for the charge stription in the user of the user o
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to creat
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chad	c.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Cutefficial pession, I and including, I and including a substitution of the Cutefficial pession and a cutefficial pession and including a substitution of the Cutefficial pession, I and including a substitution of the Cutefficial pession and including and enhanced these commitments to the final version and cutefficial pession, I and including you to solidly and enhanced these commitments to the final version and cutefficial pession.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			u. and united the CARL'S directed by Capital September and the Capital
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chaminda	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chance	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding social metal asks and useful and regulation, "cf.[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chandler	L.	Brunswick

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to "to", respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chantel	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "I would be a support to the support of the su
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 m Contented that the policy circutor lacks clarity or kinds reviews should be regulated, and rests driving small and inche foreign services out or Lanada. I ne minal direction must define the appropriate scope of online uncertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these scores to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chantel	U.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the KCRT is directed by (c) respect adjection content of the us and use cure concernments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chantele	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions" in the policy discoverability provisions in 1999, when the minimizes the need to a like algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed and to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Chantelle	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Chantelle		Ontario	As a very concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Char	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. excluding social media creations and the content from regulation; c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charlene	G.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charlene	м.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [bit] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not 'C)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charlene	R.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Charlene B	к.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Charles	м.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	В.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out access-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no manter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  4. a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementation discovershilly provisions in a way that thininizes the need to alter adoptions of broadcasting undertakings";
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darky on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am assign you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  5. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  6. "Implemented of the policy direction is effort to address the risks proposed to online expression, I am assign you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  7. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  8. "Implementation of the policy direction is effort to address the risks proposed to online expression, I
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  4. Sa concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementation gloscoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjustments of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed to to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choi
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  5. Firstly, I usual like to express my strong support for the following applicance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding solid media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [The CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c.
Charles	D.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out access the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choses to create.  1. Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in away that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] I CRTE is directed to 1 (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available":  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and
Charles Charles	D. P.	Quebec	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  5. Firstly, I sould like to appress my strongs support for the following applicance in the policy direction:  8. Trust you will lake to appress my strongs support for the following adjudance in the policy direction:  8. Trust you will alk to appress and creators and their content from regulations in a wey that minimizes the need to alter adjornthms of broadcasting undertakings";  8. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations in a separation of the policy direction
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  4. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following aguidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  c. [The [CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media acreasions.  The policy of the control of the control of
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I arm asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  2. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTE" discreted to "Lor presert audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available":  c. [the] "CRTE" discreted the propose regulatory requirements on
			d. and that the CRT is directed to "Cor respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and segression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darky on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express system groups of the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing documents and a creators and their content from respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cor respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board alg
