Mark	P.	Columbia	First of all, if there is any way to FUCK something up it will be done in CANADA. Most of my life the CRTC has forced Canadian radio stations to play a percentage of Canadian CRAP and forced us to listen to it SO I AM 120% sure we will be FORCED into some other ONLY IN CANADA. CRAP.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (KTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me classes there is make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mark	w.	New Brunswick
mark	w.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
mark	w.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
mark	w.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
mark	w.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [bit] "CRIT 6 described not be impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIT is directed to "(c) respect auditions closuce and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
mark	w.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media useers and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (The) "CRIT's derected not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIT's is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIT's is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIT's directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
mark	w.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [bit] "CRIT 6 described not be impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIT is directed to "(c) respect auditions closuce and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
mark	W.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstyl, I would like to express my strong support for the following juddence in the palicy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provision in a sexy that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and verifice their content from regulation";  c. [their CRTC is directed to 'to' [cry expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should fet the nekeous whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks calarity on which services should be regulated, and risks chiving small and niche foreigns services out of Canadia. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
mark	W.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strop support for the following juddance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media ureators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the choice of we whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
mark	w.		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following juddance in the policy direction:  a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation?  c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and verbine regulation?  c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;  d. and that the KCTC is directed in °C; respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks callrady on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no natter where they choose to create.
		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strop augusfor for the following juddance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [their] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [their] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [their] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media ureas of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firsty I, round like to express my strong upoper for the following gliddness in the policy direction:  a. *Implementing discoverability, provisions in a wind provided in the policy direction:  a. *Implementing discoverability, provided in the policy direction:  a. *Implementing discoverability, provided in the policy direction:  a. *Insplaneating discoverability, provided in the policy direction:  a. *Implementing discoverability, provided in the policy direction is a strain of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Are you really going to censor the internet in Canada like the CCP?  I can appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. [the] CRTC is directed in the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Are you really going to censor the internet in Canada like the CCP?  I can appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. "moleme
		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my stroop support for the following youldance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [their] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [their] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users whether to make use of them.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I result you will take my feedback into consideration.  I result you will take my feedba
		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong upport for the following glidance in the policy direction:  2. The planeating discoverability provision in a peny that minimize the yeard to ask and a promoting of the planeating discoverability provision in a peny that minimize the yeard to ask and the planeating discoverability provision in a year that minimize the year of the planeating undertakings';  3. The planeating discoverability provision in a year of the planeating discoverability provision and the planeating discoverability of the planeating discoverability provisions in a year of the planeating discoverability provision and an appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  2. Firstly, I would like to express my strong upport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. The concentration of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  4. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  5. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  6. Th
		Brunswick	Joseph Co online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  J. Firely, I mould like to express my strong upport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  J. Problementing discoverability provision in a way that minimizes the seed to all set algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  J. Evoluting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  C. [ the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  J. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  J. Transcomment that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Livest you will take my feedback into consideration.  Are you really going to censor the internet in Canada like the CCP?  Lean appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  J. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  J. Firstly,
		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my stroop aupont for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The pose of the policy of the policy of the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. The policy expression is a very that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*;  5. Evaluring social media users and creators and their content from regulation*;  6. (I help CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and elimente choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. I'm concerned the draft policy direction's efforts to advice step risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  3. Firstl
		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express an extraors and retains and the required the expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. To queried the final direction of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. I'm policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  3. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  4. I firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  5. The control of the direction of the po
		Brunswick	josed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express and creators and their content from regulation; 2. The place of the content of the content from regulation; 3. The place of the content of the content from regulation; 4. The place of the content of the content from regulation; 5. The content of the content from regulation; 6. The content of the content of the content from regulation; 7. C. [ their [ 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; 6. And that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; 6. And that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; 7. C. [ their content of the content of
Mark		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express any stroop support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The policy and the policy direction is a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  b. excluding solid media users and creators and their content from regulation?  c. [ their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation?  c. In the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators?;  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C; respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  4. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Trust
Mark		Brunswick	posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following updated in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and rectators and their content from regulation",  c. [ their CRIC is directed to I/C speect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and not XCRT-directed changes to two rolline algorithms work should left me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unanabiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Are you really going to censor the internet in Canada like the CCP?  I can appreciate the driat policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that irruinimizes th
Mark		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their possible, increase the splicits and control of the policy direction in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; b. Excluding social media users and creators and when possible, increase the splicing available.* 2. To further strengthen these commitments is individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be time chose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darky on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Are you really going to censor the internet in Canada like the CCP?  1 can appreciate the drift policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1 Erestly, I vould like the express my strong appost for the following applic
Mark		Brunswick	posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like the opens my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of troadcasting undertakings; b. *Excluding social medial users and recitors and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; d. and that the CTIC is directed for (2) expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options evaluable.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optionate to users like me, and ny CRTC-directed changes to those of the end choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unarnabiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Are you really going to censor the internet in Canada like the CCP?  1. Can appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like the capacity and surface surface and surface provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a
Mark		Brunswick	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "Excluding scaled media users and centros and their content from regulation",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crued that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. The content entire that the policy direction lose ski carty on which services bound an entire that the policy direction lose ski carty on which services bound an entire that the policy direction lose ski carty on which services bound an entire that the policy direction lose ski carty on which services bound an entire that the policy direction lose ski carty on which services bound an entire that the policy direction of the properties to provide the entire that the policy direction is a discretion of a direction or service in the properties to provide the entire that the policy direction is discretion of the properties to be excess to these services.  3. Lastyl, Turge the inclusion of a discretion of enurse fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  3. I trust you will alke my feedback into consideration.  4. Firsty, I would like to oppose my strong support for the following guidance
Mark	F.	Ontario Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong aupport for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Emplainmenting discoversability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a. "Enter the provision of the policy direction is a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Co" respect audience rioice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction likes a care in the policy direction likes out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction likes are considerable.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction is caused and promoting considerable and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastyl, Ture the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Firstyl, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Firstyl's would like to express my strong support for the following guidanc
Mark	F.	Ontario Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my extroa guptor for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Teach properties of the commitments of the
Mark	F.	Ontario Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I mould like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: 2. The rectioning social to the commitments of
Mark	F.	Ontario Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Fresty, I mould like to express my revision group sport for the following quidance in the policy derection: 2. Emplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*; 3. CelleyCTCC dericted not in proses update or requirements of the control of the policy derection or the prosest control of the policy derection or the prosest control of the policy derection or the policy derection to receive the policy derection in ordinary and optional to sure like me, and any CTC-derected changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. In current exhibit the policy direction is a solid to the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection of the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is a control of the policy derection in the policy derection is the policy derection in the policy derection in the policy derection is the policy derection of the policy derection in the policy derection is the policy derection of the policy derection in the policy derection in a way that minimizes the need to alter display and policy and enhance these commitments in the final derection must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they droace to create.  1. Frestly, Tread Bible to appear for the final derice policy derection in a sex of the policy derection in a
Mark	F.	Ontario Ontario	posed to confine expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the first version.  1. Firstly, I would be to express my strong upport for the following clustrosis:  1. The proposed provided in the provided in th
Mark	F.	Ontario Ontario	posed to online expression, I am acking you to soldify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I most like to expression y through going againstic in the princip direction in the princip direction as any that minimize the read to all experiments of the production of the princip direction of the p
Mark	F.	Ontario Ontario	posed to coline agreeation, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the first version.  I Firstly, I would like to express my strong souport for the following address the hepdy (principle):  a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes be need to allow adjustment of broadcasting undertakings";  d. and that the CNIC is directed by the provision of a way that minimizes the coption of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction of the control of the policy direction of the CNIC is directed by the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the control of the policy direction rules out services the rule of the policy direction rules out services the rule of the policy direction rules out services the rule of the policy direction rules out services the rule of the policy direction rules out services the rule of the policy direction rules out services the rule of the policy direction rules out services the rule of the policy directio

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exclusions social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. It that "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that "CRIT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that "CRIT's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mark		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "c) or "expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media creators"
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mark		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mark and		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leslie	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marlene	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
marlene	b.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cyc respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listry, Turge the inclusion of all orderion to desure tair and equal treatment for all clandian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by bill C-11 s implementation must be equally available to all clandian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marlene	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marlene	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a limplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; d. and 1CRTC is directed to *Cy*Creator adulence choice and, where possible, increase the optons available*; the contraction of the contrac
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marlin	J.	Yukon
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. "By "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenathen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marion	N.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
riarion		Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marlon	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marlon	В.	Alberta	First and foremost, May God be glorified in in this great nation always," God keep our land glorious and free "
			Reading the template you left for me to use as a comment I can't help but to think that you are trying to trick people into accidentally and inadvertently praise this bill, that reminds me of what the communist use to do in front of the press with poor peasants in my native Nicaragua.  I like freedom of excression and being able to speak my mind repardless of who might like. I only have to make sure I don't say any false testimony or use derogatory, sexist or racist language, might way of thinking might offend someone but that doesn't mean I should stop thinking that way, nor should stop educating my children to think the way I 6.0, I understand the Prime Minister doesn't think that people who think different should be tolerated, I think we all should be tolerated, I then Canada of John Dielenbaker: "I am Canadian, refe to et opseak without per feer to opseous without per or free to tho soos those those who will opser my country. This heritage of Marlon	н.	Ontario	freedom I pledge to uphold for myself and all mankind." I love John Diefenbaker's Canada, much more than Justin Trudeau's Canada. I oppose c I I for I believe is wrong.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Made	_	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marlyn	T.	COIDIDIA

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marnie	s.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marnie	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ridiffic		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id intected not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Quality of content: intelligent Canadians from across the country should be assured that their government is doing its utmost to ensure that they have access to content that is fair, intelligent and well-made. Inferior, poorly-made or ill-conceived content should not be made available by an algorithm just because it is Canadian.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marnie	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marsha	0.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marston	W.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to drimine Expression, I am assuing you demanded unseed commitments and main version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			The second second and second and second
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martha	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to drimine Expression, I am assuing you demanded unseed commitments and mean version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			"mpelmenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "mpelmenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martha	L.	Ontario

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolution".
			D. excusing social mean users and creators and meir content from regulation respect of programs of social media creators";  C. ([the] "CNTC is directed not ic impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martha	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. (the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martin	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martin	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Martin	C.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martin	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory regulatory and undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'to' prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martin	T.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjorthms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the] CYRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
MARTIN	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adjorthms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the] "CNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Martin	М.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. There is a lot of good ideas but some changes need to be made in my opinion.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be opt-out to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to continue to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Martin	М.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person and someone who works in Technology (I am an engineer) in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
martin	r.	Ontario	To whom of concern.
			I want to say that freedom is something that is not entitled to you at birth, but something that has to be fought for to the very last. My grandpa fought in the Korean War against communism. He fought for our freedom, the right to express our opinions, and the freedom and right to movement of information. He did not die thinking that we should suppress the freedom of expression.  When my family moved to Canada, we did not come to this country thinking that there would be a slither of communism, which is the Bill-11. We must never tolerate any form of communism in this country, including censorship and propaganda imposed by the current political party in power, the Liberals.  This is not communist China or a Russian dictatorship, this is Canada. Let's keep it that way, not only for us, but for all the generations of Canadians that come after. Bill-11, is a censorship bill, it's not just about money, but political interests of social idealists.
			As Carl Jung said "Every form of addiction is bad, no matter whether the narcotic be alcohol, morphine or idealism." This bill is an ideologically motivated interest of the Liberal government. Ideology has no place in our governments, only factual and rational logic.
			Canada is a great country, let's keep it that way. If not for ourselves, than for future generations,
		British	I hope you take this matter seriously,
Martin	L.	Columbia	Thank you.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online updertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Lastly, I am a Canadian, and an immigrant, and consume a lot of content from my origin country. Any changes that would prevent me from from accessing that content on social network and streaming services would actually directly harm me personally, as well as millions of other Canadian immigrants, by cutting us off from our roots against our consent.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martin	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			*s. Lasty, tage the introduction of a unection to ensure rain and equal readment for an Canadian online deators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martina	D.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Martine	w.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbors and their content from requisition".
			b. exclusing souls means uses along the state of the stat
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marton	R.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a long to a lo
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marty	М.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marven	h.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter place the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and where possible, increase the options available". c. [the] CRTC is directed to "Cy' cryesect audionice choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marvin	z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" crespect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MARVIN	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] 'CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] 'CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mary	P.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Prince	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	1.	Edward Island

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Exhaulting south means are a rule means a few the means are the control of the south of the control of the south of the control of the co
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	d.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. himplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Магу	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. "By "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "Sevulution sorial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Exclusing social metal users and creature and user content from regulation;  (E [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	R.	Ontario

			As a second control of the school of the second control of the sec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. excluding social media creations and their Collection (Incl. regulation),  C [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	н.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mary	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from receives the options available". c. [thei] "CRTC is directed to CVC prespect audionized robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary	A.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mary Ann	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements in online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and the the CRTC is directed in "Color programs and under programs and unde
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mary- Frances	L.	Prince Edward Island	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MaryAnn	0.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MaryAnne	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MaryAnne	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mason	w.	Newfoundlan d and Labrador	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mason		Labradoi	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     b. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Massimiliano	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mathew	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mathew	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
riddiew		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			<ul> <li>exclusing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;</li> <li>c, thei   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mathieu	c.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft.
			As a Charlete plessifin Laileas, 1 and submitted in Charlet Study Breath Charlet (Substantable and Equitable Charlet Constantable (Submitted in Charlet Constantable Charlet Constantable Charlet Constantable Charlet
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mathieu	w.	Ontario	I do not support at all Bill C-11
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mathieu	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on conline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listry, Turge the inclusion of a invection to design rearment for all canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by sill C-11 s implementation must be equally available to all canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matilde	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c) the   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C. (high Units of Michael Int to important programs of the CATE of
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matt	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matt	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from psyllation"; continued to the content of the content from the co
			c. [the] "CRTC: is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
	v	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matt	V.	OHINE	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "deviduring social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matt	D.	Ontario

			As a second control of
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matt	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matt	P.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my support for the introduction of the following elements:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Matt	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
riacc		Colditible	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" esspect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  There should not be any limitations on what I want to see, what I don't want to see, and I have no interest in seeing anymore Canadian content than I already see.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matt	G.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. It appears that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators is critical. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Matt	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	S.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerning person in calleage, and anomalous of the concerning the continuation of the cont
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding solal media users and creators and their content from explusition"; b. "excluding solal media users and creators and their content from explusition";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	H.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			Developing local instead users all content and the content of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Matthew	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rideriew		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "Natic is directed not to impose regulation" on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c; the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Matthew	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter allogarithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (°) (erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	N.	Ontario

			As a concerned percen in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order Institute in the CPTC (Sustainable and Smithable Secretary). While I amounted the dark
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it carbon and user London. How the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
matthew	g.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
matthew	m.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing bourseaumy provisions in a well that maintainess tree level to deed agolutions or trouval countries. The securities of the control of the co
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	W.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Matthew	0.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social metal users and creators and meir content rom regulation, rom regulation (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiniously. So we don't loss acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	G.	Alberta

			As a concentral page in Canada. Law submitting my composite on the Order Israina Nicotions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Equitable Regulators Framework). While I approximate the desti-
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social metals uses and creators and trier continent norm registration. For the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Matthew	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTL is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
MATTHEW	6	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
matthew		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
matthew	2.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Matthew	м.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	M.	NOVA SCOUA	As we consider potential improvements to the Online Streaming Act, there are two areas of particular concern for me:
			1. The burden of proof to be considered "Canadian media" must be modernized. Consider for instance Linus Media Group (https://linusmediagroup.com), which employs some ~100 people in Canadia to produce dozens of videos per week with millions of views on You'ldne-Vet they are not considered Canadian media, due to outdated expectations aimed at older forms of media. They estimated they would need to hire field-li-time staffs solely to complete appearonk to qualify, and that the costs would outweigh any funding benefits. A company which hires dozens of Canadians to produce media clearly contributes to our country's media industry, and it should be easy for them to qualify for CanCon benefits.
			2. Services which exist solely to bring foreign media to Canadians must be excluded. Specialized stranning services which allow Canadians to whath foreign films and TV shows (from Europe, Asia, and so on) would be forest to be been Canadians to the trib media landscape of the rest of the world, excluding Canadians from participating in global conversations. One screening exervices would be Britistox and AccomTV for British programming, Crunchyroll for Japanese programming, Mubi for foreign films, and so on. These services by definition cannot meet CanCon requirements, and rules should be made for continuing access to their services.
			Included below is some recommendations from the organization OpenMedia, which I agree with as well. However I wanted to make sure that my personal comments were clearly visible at the top of my message.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Matthew	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	ľ		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Matthew	L.	Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 c. (the) "CNTC is directed to into impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to "CP respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3.
I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators matter where they choose to create I trust you will take my feedback into consideration I have opted to leave the default included because I agree with every bit of that and frankly cannot articulate the legalese so eloquently. As per how I want to use the internet, I give you the following to mull over. I love unique content. I like watching content creators outside of Canada, I like recommendations of users who speak different languages, like watching cooking channels from Japanese, Chinese, Indian, Arabic restaurant kitchens, learning how to speak the language through these videos. I do not want to lose these unique recommendations from my feeds because You deem them "Not Canadian enough". I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling "Canadian content" as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. This BIII-C11 is a waste of our Countries resources to push content that people don't even want to watch. I watch Canadia content by accident, not by choice. If I like a creator, I will watch more, if I don't, no amount of recommendations will change that. All if I does is inflate who YOU have decided is worth Canadian content and potentially leave other equally Canadian creators and content at the wayside. Bill-C11 is a major problem and should not be implemented at all when it comes to the internet. I do not want to go to Netflix and find that I cannot watch The Walking Dead because it was Filmed in and takes place in America. I do not want to find that I can only watch Bon Cop Bad Cop, Bad Blood, The Great Canadian Baking show, or The trailer park boys. Frankly I don't care about any of these shows. I want variety not to be force fed what has been decidedly Canadian content by the government and "Good" for pertical Canadians to watch or to up Canadian films. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian made, no one gives a shit and people will just find other means to by pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content susted believ on interests, myself included and unapologestically so. Please protect free speech. "The sound of disagreement is the sound of liberty."
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expensesion, I am adding you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 c. (the) "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to "CP respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's imple matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implammenting discoverability nervisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. Implementing uscretability provisions in a way rule in imminizes the need to after agricultural to discussing undertakings; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation?
c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online reposible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lack didn't on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertakings of the properties of the properties and the properties of the properties o I trust you will take my feedback into consideration As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. 1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
c. [the] "CKTC is directed to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",
d. and that the CKTC is directed to "Cyl respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm walkeration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be not enclosed or optional to uses risk me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambioususly, so we don't lose access to these services. 5. As a digital content creator this bill will effectively kill all my local and world reach, killing the opportunity to compete on the world stage. Along with backfiring on every platform, Google has already announced it will NOT index any Canadian As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any me be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no master where the choose to create As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks and proposed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the goldy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chosely whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canamater where they choose to create.

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTT (Sustainable and Envistable Developation Developation Developation Developation Developation Developation Developation
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maureen	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maureen	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose resultative requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Maureen	G.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ridurcen	G.	Coldinala	As a concerned Canadian I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I am opposed to the passage of the C11 legislation and will work to see it repealed. In the meantime, however, I and other Canadians are watching closely to see what you do with the related draft policy direction.
			I support Open Media's demands that the policy directs:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. that the policy rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. That the policy defines the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		British	4. that the policy ensures fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Maureen	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS id induced not impose regulation", requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maurice	R.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to 'Orl respect audience choice and where coasible, increase the outpoints available"; d. and that the CRCTs is directed to 'Orl respect audience choice and where coasible in content and the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maurice	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to college concerning. I am action uses to registify, not exhause those commitments in the first species.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of adjection to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maurico	V	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			us and unit of the contract of
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mauro	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Max	W.	Ontario	Dear incompetent government figures,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chave whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Max	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Dear Sir/Madam,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available of the program of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 fm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Max	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. that of LRTC is directed to (°) (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and opcoring to describe the continued to th
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maxime	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			*This bill will allow the CRTC, a group of people not elected, in direct communication with the Liberal government and with vested interests in what is and is not presented to control everything on the Internet. Censorship of creators, social media users, what is allowed to be seen on the Internet, algorithims is not only undemocratic it is another step toward a full dictatorship.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Maxine	C.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  "Implementing discountability requiring in a year that minimize the good harden of headerstrip undertaking."
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mayu	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mazin	-	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MdZIII		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interlatings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed by "Cyr respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Meagan	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscila media users and creators and whele content from requiation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Meera	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Megan	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
regall	191.	OntallO	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interleatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy'c respect audience choice and, where cossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Megan	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helfer content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Megan	0.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Exacuting social metal users and return with regulation, "  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Megan	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. minimementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Megan	3.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Meghan	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mel	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1101	5.	Coldinold	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melanie	F.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melanie	G.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melinda	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melissa	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Excluding social metale users and return was and return control regulation, "  C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melissa	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melissa	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation", social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melissa	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Moliner	м	Onterio	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melissa	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Melissa	K.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a second course in Court I am admitted an accompany to the Order I aming Disputing to the COTO (Countries) to the COTO (Cou
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			b. excluding souls means and used son't seem from regulator in the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional (and transparent) to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melissa	М.	Alberta	As a consumed accord in Canada, I am pulmilities my comments on the Order Insuine Directions to the OTT (Sustainable and Equitable Production Regulators Engaged). While I appropriate the deaft solicy direction's effect to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Melody	М.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC Es directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Melody	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" crespect audionect choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Melvin (Mel)	Z.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not be impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" crespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mercedes	S.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Merrill	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Merv	N	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
. ICI V

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", conclude the content of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKI C-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mervin and Theresa	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
meresa		Pilotita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Meryl	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Micah	E.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of Proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to /CJC respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael		d and Labrador
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding social nesula sees and releases and seed control regulators. In order guidance, from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	J.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ithe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	G.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", d. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y equilements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michael	В.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MICHAEL	Б.	Quenec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discovershibly provision is in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations", the content from regulations of the content from regulations or continued to the content from regulations or continued to the content from regulations or continued to the content from regulations or continued from the content from regulations or content from regulations or content from regulations or content from the content from regulations or content from the cont
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed into timpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Impleffetung discover admit provisations in a very triat minimizes trien ence of a diser arguments of under countries of the countries of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  "excluding solal media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the "CRTC is directed to to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media and are accordanced by the content of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction ladds clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do notine personal manager of an advantage mirror and advantage mir
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a vary that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".</li> </ol>
			to. Exacioning social means are in the cases and under content from regulation;  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	S.	Ontario	As a concerned page on in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order I region Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Equitable Properties Population Formwoods). While I appropriate the destination's effects to address the right
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "and that the CRTL's idirected to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTL's idirected to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I uroe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	М.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
michael	b.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks person in Canada, I am selding a variety to called the property of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			 Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	w.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and reariors and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	P.	Ontario	As a concerned parent in Charles I am culmilities my comments on the Order Iregine Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Equitable Production Communical). While I appropriate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "I would be a support of the provision of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michael	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pilcildei	Б.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the! "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CKTC is directed to 'to' (prepect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", [t] the ['CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and helir content from regulation";     social media users and creators and helir content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	w.	Ontario

Fig. 1. Prof.   Long to separate the separate means against the separate me
Part
ROMA  A DESCRIPTION OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PRO
Fig. 1. Sec. 19 Percent for the company of the comp
House Part Company of the American Security Company of the America
Note: The proposal part of the control of the policy in management for the Control of the policy in the Control of the policy in the Control of the Control
No. 1 Processes and the control of t
A searned greater in colors of the searned greater in the Color interior of the color in Prop.   Table   Tabl
NOME  A secretary agreement in the protection of the contractive of th
NODE IN COLUMN AND ADDRESS OF THE PROPERTY OF OF THE PR with missionary, we want to be asserted and part inclination of a Canadam orbits creaters. Any financial or promision outperfusion created by BIT C11's implementation must be equally outperfusion or contact. In missionary promision or the Order Tournamy Development to the CPIC (blassification) or promision or contact. In missionary efforts to address the missionary or contact or the CPIC (blassification) or contact or the CPIC (blassification) or contact or the CPIC (blassification) or contact or contact or the CPIC (blassification) or contact Hotal I. Solution for the interface in the research for and grantening in containing reporting the containing reporting in containing reporting in the policy of containing and an interface of the containing reporting in the policy of containing and an interface of the containing reporting in the policy of containing and an interface of the containing and an interf Horse United Section 1 Protection of the Conference of the COTT (Editationals and Egyptidate) Promisers), While I approache the draft policy direction of efforts to address the risks and the COTT (Editationals and Egyptidate) Promisers), While I approache the draft policy direction of efforts to address the risks and the conference of the COTT (Editationals and Egyptidate) Promisers (I Promis
As a concerned person in careful, an amountain programments on the Color interaction to the Color interaction of the Colo
PRIVATE  Proposed is collected experiences. Less endangers upon appears for the first better the experience and an experience of control of the control of t
A "Inspirementing discoverability provisions in a well delimination to shall algorithms of functionability of the control of t
C (the 1 VIII) is deed that to impose engolation presidented so of integer depropries of early and integer and int be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-detected changes be how online algorithms with should did me of choose designed in a present of manks. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online understatings clearly and management that the policy direction is caused any management of the policy direction.  Lateral, say, the individual control or any control or any control or on any control or Highest P. Ostero  A classify, large the inclusions of advection to amount fail and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by 88 C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in matter whose they doubt to consideration.  Highest P. Ostero  A concerned person in Canada, 1 am adventing my comments on the Driver Taxing Directions, in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the inclusion of the comment of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the inclusion of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the inclusion of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the inclusion of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is facility on the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting).  I result the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting) in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting).  I result the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting).  I result that the CRTC is direction to inclinate direction of the comment of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting).  I result that the CRTC is direction to inclinate direction of the comment of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting) Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is facility to middle and CRTC and and an adversary of the law results and the CRTC (Sustainable and Equilable Breadcasting) Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is expected, and online creators, in matter where they draft definition to consideration.  I result
4. Lastly, Turpe the rollation of a direction to essure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.
Nichade P. Ontario.  As a concerned grant per land and provided and an experiment of the Chief Issuing Directions to the CHIT (Sustainable and Equitable Breadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks post on colinic appreciasor. In adding you to adding and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong apport for the following pulsation in the policy direction:  2. "Regularization of the colinic appreciasor." In adding you to adding and enhance these commitments in the final version.  3. Provided the colinic application of the colinic application of the colinic application of the colinic application provided in a display and a strong of the policy direction into a colinic undertaking in respect of programs of post and make creators."  3. It may not be a strong the colinic application of the colinic application provided in a display the strong and application provided in a display the provided in a strong and application provided in a display the strong and application provided in a display the strong and application provided in a st
As a concerned person in Crueka, I, an submitting my comments on the Chefer Issuing Directions to the CATE (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posts or online operations. The control of t posed to online expression, 1 am askiny too to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The firstly makes and the control of the policy direction of the policy direction and the first firstly and the first firstly makes and the policy direction in the policy direction rules out access the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content show that the policy direction is a content and the first should be the policy direction of the policy direction rules out access the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be reputationally and the first should be reputationally and on the first should be reputationally and the first should be reputationally and on the first should be reputationally and on the first should be reputationally and on the first should be reputationally and the reputational and the first should be reputationally and the reputational and the reputational and the first should be reputationally and the reputational and reputational and reputational and re
a. "Implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to place algorithms of broadcasting undertakings?"  c. (1981) CTCL discovera for the timpus requirements on ordinary and control to the control of the c be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. If monoment that the policy direction is exercised.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to resure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in matter where they choose to create.  1. Thust you will take my feetback into consideration.  2. The control of
3. This concerned that the policy direction facts during you which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we off not searces to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge this inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in matter where they chose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to entire expression, I am address you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1 Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  3 Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the final version.  4 To further strengthen these commitments on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  5 d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Crit prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.  5 To further strengthen these commitments to individual choicing in expect of programs of social media creators';  6 and that the CRTC is directed to 'Crit prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.  6 Turst you will take the policy direction to 'Crit prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.  7 To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice of a direction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration must be equally available to all Canadian coiline creators, in matt
A Lasty, Turge the Indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to soldify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  Firstly, I would like to express my groups of the following guidance in the policy direction's in the final version.  Firstly, I would like to express my groups apport for the following guidance in the policy direction's in the final version.  Firstly, I would like to express my groups apport for the following guidance in the policy direction and expression of the committee of the policy direction and the policy direction and applications of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to important single intervention of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content she be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithm work should set me choose whether to make use of them.  J. In concerned that the policy direction lack callary on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  A Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be
It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following updated in the policy direction in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  b. Treaturing social media uses and creators and their content from regulation/dispin in support of programs of social media creators;  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C() respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  3. The concerned that the policy direction locks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bear excess to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Michael P. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I app michael O. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks passed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the') CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their expossible, increase the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in mater where they choose to create they can be considerable.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Michael P. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy dir posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firsty, 1, would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media acreators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 10" c) respect undertakings in respect of programs of social media acreators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 10" c) respect undefines the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online dispertitions which should like me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, and matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  1. Irrust, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. I fratery in yould like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direc
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience of locie and each, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Michael P. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction is expression, if is crucial that the final versio
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction locks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Michael P. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in final version of broadcasting undertakings';  1. expression or solid propers of the policy direction is a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I. urge the inclusion of a direction to nessure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Michael P. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to large originations of voodcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. their CRTC is directed not to impose regulations, or online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. their CRTC is directed not to impose regulations;  d. and thus the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increases the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice on and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online ali
4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Michael P. Ontario  Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet to alter goodnines of the policy direction in a way that minimizes the neet to alter goodnines of the policy direction in a way that minimizes the neet to alter goodnines of the policy direction for goodnines of the policy direction and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect addience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction locks carriy on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and e
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Michael P. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social mediu seers and creators and their cortent from regulatory, c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect adulatione choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michael P. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter opportunities of the content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm connected that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I unge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, an matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social mediu users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(or respect audience choice and, where possible, and where the the CRTC is directed to "(or respect audience choice and, where possible, and where the the CRTC is directed to "(or respect audience choice and, where possible, and where the commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I ung the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, an unter where they choose to create.
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to '(c) respect addiscince officies and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> <li>Lastly, I unge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, number where they choose to create.</li> </ol>
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, number where they choses to create.
matter where they choose to create.
LOUIS YOU WILL CARE THY TECODORS HITCO CONSIDER GOOD.
Michael G. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [tel] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Capada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of police undertakings clearly and
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

			As a concepted person in Canada, Lam submitting my compositing my compositing to the CRIO (Surthinable and Excitable Residentian Residenti
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social mental users and treated shift their control regulation /  C. (Ethe) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	C.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	w.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	z.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "C() respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "C() respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	c.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	P.	British Columbia

			As a second service (Court I as a shallful as a second service Court (Court I as a second service Court I as a sec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sorial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social mental users and treated shift their control regulation /  C. (Ethe) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
michael	c.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	c.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from receives the options available." c. [their CRTC is directed to CVC (respect audionece rotice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	L.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Prissly, 1 without five veginles my soring support for the romoving guidancie in the planty guidancie.  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not be impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cry respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the ootions available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	J.	British Columbia	a dust you mit can my dequest, mot oursiderabulit.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. the CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			the voluntary and opcorate outsets alse in e.g., and any CMC-rotected cleanage of now vinime arguments which serving small and inclined foreign services out to interest use on users.  3. I'm concentrate that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and online foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
riiciaei	141.	Colditible	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			While recognizing that current technology brings with it risks of abuse through disinformation, regulatory efforts must be balanced and respect the Constitution and Bill of Rights. We need neither tyranny nor a Nanny state.  To paraphrase Benjamin Franklin, those who sacrifice freedom in lieu of safety will have neither.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restarts and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulation y on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>excusions social media users an or reasors and meir content from regulation ',</li> <li>c. Ethe "CRT's directed not to impose regulations' requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	м.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			to [the] CNTC is directed in to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cyl respect sudience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michael	P.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michael	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		I believe social media users and those who produce content should not be hamstrung in their efforts and hope the CRTC is dissuaded from imposing regulatory requirements on same. Creators need protection from CRTC efforts to disrespect audience choice, and in fact, increase their options.
Michael	D.	Manitoba	Promotion of Canadian content should be voluntary, and any CRTC changes should respect that principle.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reoutlation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michael	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michael	1.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
- neriael	J.	Joidilloid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. an unature CVT is directed or (v) respect administration enter, mixed possible, inclease are options averaged.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michaela	к.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michalina	к.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alteral applications of productions of the policy directions."
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michel	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-ciffercted changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, one don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insule where they know a Cleane.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michel	S.	Ontario	Control of the contro
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
MACHE		0.4.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MICHEL	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michel	D.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michel	N.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed no to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. There are regulations that should be allowed, like death threats and cursing words should not be allowed. I would also say about hate speaking, but it depends how the government defines it. However, having the government in full control is pure nonsense. Even if there is something that they don't like or want people should know, that goes completely against the charter right. You should be really careful because there are some regulations that Bill C11 is complete conditions. Also, there would almost be guaranteed of a lawsuit if this goes out of control. Remember, no one is above regulations, not even the government.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michel	P.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Supplying and in user and constant and the constant from the population"
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michele	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
· ···CIICIE	٠.	UTILATIO

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Excluding social metal users and retain control regulation;  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michele	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michele	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
riicheic	3.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle	М.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle	М.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRTs id directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michelle	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online excression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on ordine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Michelle	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			Developing boal mate users allowed the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any UKIL-directed changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or mem.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michelle	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pilchelle		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chew there to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle	v.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Michelle	s.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Michelle- Lynne	L.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a control person in Calabot, a sin sign you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the first restance and Equipment and Equipment (and the special person). The sign sign you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mick	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			**************************************
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mihai	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mijin	Y.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from clear to the content from their content from the content from the content from their content from the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyr, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mike	В.	0.4.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MIKE	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MIKE	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	Q.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to collect properties. I am addition you to collection and expenses the control of the
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect addiscince orbice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	G.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mike	m.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mike	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (E) (E) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks accord to action, processing. I am action you to called a processing and the commitment in the first section.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
MIKE	1.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		Ontallo	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	w.	Ontario	A WARE THE WITH COMMON THE WITHOUT STATE OF THE STATE OF

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Envisable Developering Developering Developering Developering Developering Developering Developering
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mike	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose resultative requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
mike	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
IIIKE	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms with should let me do so the control of th
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mike	K.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. recluding social media users and restors and their content from regulation; c. [the] CRCT is directed from the properties of the properties of the properties of social media creators"; c. [the] CRCT is directed from the properties of the properties of the properties of social media creators"; c. [the] CRCT is directed from the properties of the properties of social media creators"; c. [the] CRCT is directed from the properties of the properties of social media creators"; c. [the] CRCT is directed from the properties of the properties of social media creators"; c. [the] CRCT is directed from the properties of the pro
			a. and that the LVLL is oriented to (c) respect aubience enoise and, where possible, increase me options available:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a conceiled person in Carlean, a submitted in Carlean Submitted in Carlean Submitted (Carlean Submitted Carlean Submitted Carlean Submitted Carlean Submitted Carlean Submitted Carlean Submitted Carlean Submitted Carle
			1. Firsty.1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. 'Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
miko		Alborta

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social menia users and creators and user content from regulation."  C [the] "CRTs directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mike	C.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Tinc	C.	Priocita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c) the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To crither strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be run choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mike	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mike	h.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mike	L.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "evulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			to. Exclusing social metal users and treatures and their content from regulation."  C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. exclusing souls means uses along the state of the stat
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	I.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content in the content in their content in the content in</li></ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	0.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	Р.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final residence of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding odical media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mike	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
· mc		Omalio	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy interest to large services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		0	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	L.	Saskatchewa n

			As a concepted person in Canada, I am submitting my composits on the Order Insulan Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Excitable Deciderals Composition Composition and Canada and Cana
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mike	к.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mikhaela	3.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mikhail	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mil	s.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to *Cy   creater advances choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mili	C.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Min Woo	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and heli content from regulation"; c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and delicine choice and, where possible, increase the options availables"; d. and that the CRTC is directed by "Cyr expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
mina	m.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mira	Α.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Miranda	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rillalida		Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Miranda	J.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mircea	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choicy sweether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Miriam	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1/m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Miriam	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concented person in Caladar, I am submitting in your bring its storing view to the following product on line expression, I am submitting in your bring storing to the CNC (Susaniane and equitable broadcasting kegoladary realizework), while I appreciate the draft pointy unequals sentitive to provide the product of th
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "syclutions sorial media users and restrains and their content from repulsation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Miriam	L.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mishelle	M.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada,
			This bill sickens me to the brim and unconstitutional according to our charter.
			I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mitch	C.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mitch	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mitchell	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mitchell	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MITCHELL	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restarts and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mitchell	C.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			C. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mitchell	F.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRIT is directed to "(c)" respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nitchelle	m.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the needs of alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
liykael	т.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' espect adulationer choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
0	Р.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
OHAMED	K.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", creating the social media users and creators and their content from regulation", creating the social media users and creators and their content from regulation "creating their content from regulation", creating the social media creators"; d. and that the ACRTC is directed by CV in respects adjustings toking and where socials lengths available", creating the social media creation in the social m
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
lohammed	z.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed to 10 impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" crespect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered in the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered in the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered in the content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
lona	H.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	- 11

			As a concepted person in Canada, Lam submitting my composits on the Order Jesuine Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Sustainable and Sust
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "exclusions orial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social metal users and treative and their content from regulation;  (E the) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mona	m.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; a provision of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Monica	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Monica	Α.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Monica	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Monika	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambiguing the services of the ser
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Monique	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media creators"
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Monique	м.	Ontario	and the state of t

			As a concentral corresponding to the Control of the
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	D.	0.41.11	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Monique	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Monique	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mora	т.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helder content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
MORGAN	м.	0.41.11	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
PIORGAN	PI.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
morgan	f.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks accord to college concerning. I am addition uses to college, and appears those commitments in the first uncertainty.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and helier content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; the the CRTC" directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			De Voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKI C-inerced changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or trees.  3. I'm concerned that the policy infection lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inambininusly. So, we don't lose across to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Morgan	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to college expression. I am a titing you to explicit, and exhaust those commitments in the first version.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Time/promotion directions/blink progriden is a wount bit to principle to a be provided by a product a large and providence is a providence in the product and providence is a providence in the providence is a providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence is a providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the providence in the providence is a providence in the p
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and helic orother from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			1. Casay, 1 uge unit russion or advection of eliaber lan and equal destricts for all canadian orimine deators. Any minima or profition upportunities deated by the C113 implementation must be equally available to an Canadian orimine deators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Morgan	6	Albanta	a was you mit lake my required mot consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "exclusions social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  Production social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			in the second of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Morgan	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Horgan		Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [.the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y equipments on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastby, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Morgan	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "deducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't hose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Moriah	v.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1.1 hrsty, I would like to express my strong support for the ioniowing gludance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me towe whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mr	J.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", to. excounting social mental users and treators and their content from regulation ,     (t [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mr	J.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter original Canadian content,
			b. and that the CRTC is directed to "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. The importance of ensuring privacy law continues to be guided by a balanced purpose statement that enables organizations to use personal information to conduct essential aspects of business in a manner that improves the lives of individuals, while protecting their privacy rights.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mr. Rafe	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			0. excluding social media users an are records and meir content from regulation',     (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mudar	Α.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mudiaga	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Muhammad			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Razaul	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Muriel	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social aedia creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Muriel	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Murielle	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Murray	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "explusion social media users and creators and their content from emulation".  "explusion social media users and creators and their content from the "implementation" in the provision of the
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoulbe voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Murray	F.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Murray	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Murray	т.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Murray	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
murray	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to limpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Finally, like much legislation on various subjects, this draft appears overly expedient and frankly, lazy.
Murray	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to limpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Murray	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mya	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Myles	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requlation", social media users and creators and their content from requlation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Myles	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me (should it exist at all), and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should always let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services, and be able to legally protect them should we suspect the CRTC are threatening them in bad faith.
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create or where they exist along the political spectrum. No more glass ceilings for content creators falsely deemed "problematic" or "alt-right" simply for questioning deeply destructive left-leaning ideologies that have poisoned herine spaces across the world.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Myles	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Myrna	H.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Myron	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
N	T.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to Tropic of the CRTC is directed to Trop
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Nadia	т.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rauid	1.	OTILIA IU	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(") respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nadia	Α.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nadine	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. Implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Interest the provisions of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nadine	3.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the incussion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Nadir	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ndull	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Najamuddin	М.	Ontario	As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to myself I believe wholeheartedly that I should be able to make my own decision about what I watch or listen too.  Nobody has the right to take that away. If you don't like what you hear. Turn it off. It's easy. I do it all the time especially when Trudeau is talking.  He is full of Bullshit.  You should turn him off or better yet. Censor him.
			Tour Stroug Curt I may be deter yet: Cales in Illin.  Do should curt in in the determine the determined the de
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from the content of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Naline	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' expect eadleniece choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			A. Lastly. I grow the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Nan	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
reart		columbid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; C is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	K.	Quebec

			As a support of Court I am when the Code I aming District to the COTO (Curbinship as 15 % 10 % 10 % 10 % 10 % 10 % 10 % 10 %
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nancy	J.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nuncy	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nancy	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  "Social and a super and constant and their explose from equalition".
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	н.	British Columbia	a war you mit which my countries may consider a with a consideration of the consideration of

			I agree with all of what follows. Censorship is never good.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; d. and 1 CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nancy	к.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			I agree with the contents of this form letter from OpenMedia:
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "secluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adjence choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Seculation and a long and provision and the provision and the provision of the provision and the p
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	Z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [. the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nancy	j.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and or "or "or "or "or "or "or "or "or "or
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nance	w	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nancy	D.	Alberta	a uses you will case my recourse into consuleration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Naomi	T.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Naomi	1.	Quenec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Naomi	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "decluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Naomi	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks dantly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambibuously, so we don't be services.
			1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Napoleon	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			o. Exhaulting social metals uses and return with regulation in the control of the state of the s
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nasrudin	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Québec, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Stop blocing any news or feedbacks that aren't from here. We have the right to really know what's going on else where in the world with the thruth even if you do not agree to it or try to hide many facts/truths to us. And stop manipulate people in one way of thinking. We have the right to differents opinions and it's okay that the people don't agree with you. Instead of blocing them or deleting them, it's actually healthy to the society to have debates in all field of conversations.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Natacha	C.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Natalia	м.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the ]*CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and hat the RCTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Natalia	0.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expension, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. I would also like a need for such a policy altogether? It seems like there becomes more protection to individuals who are "offended" by someone else right to 'freedom of expression'.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation,"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Natalia	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Concrete person in Linka at a stim you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the Unit (Joursainable and Equitable proaccising regulatory Framework). Write 1 appreciate the draft policy directions errors to accress the risks produced from the property of the p
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Natalie	к.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
recenc	10.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3. I'm contemed that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche toreign services out of Canada. Ihe heal direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Natalie	L.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks accord to college properties. I am action you to calleff, and only see these commitments in the first section.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; (Ethe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		L	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Natalie	М.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Natalie	C.	Columbia

Lead from the content of the other power and the content of the co				As a proposed agree in Canada, Lam submitting my comments on the Order Jesuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developing Comments). While I amount the definition of the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developing Comments).
For any service of the service of th
For a service of the				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
Handbook of the control of the contr				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Procedure of the process of the pr				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Lange 1 and				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Part				Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a common part on the Control of t
Hand to recommend to the state of the state	Natasha	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned nection in Canada. Tam submittion my comments on the Order Issuino Directions to the Order Issuino Direction Direction to the Order Issuino Direction Direction Direction Direction Direction Direction Direction Direction Direction
Service of the company of the compan				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
2. Section and other controlled the controlled to the control of t				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [thei   "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Service of the control of the purity which makes any which makes and part a
Part				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Part				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a particular for control control. In an activity to control proposed by the proposed price and proposed price of the proposed price of the proposed price of the proposed price of the	Nathalie	м.	Quebec	As a concerned across in Chanda, I am submitting mu comments on the Order Insulan Directions to the OFT (Sustainable and Equitable Production Doubleton Engaged). While I approximate the deaft solicy directions offset to address the circle.
Proposed Company of the proposed p				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Services and grown by use the min, and any CRT-Growthous change on the services and any country of the services of the service				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", t. "[the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
A transport but the place of contract that contract the contract that the contract t				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Language of the control of the contr				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
The second process of the company and take my whether the conditions will be a processed process on a case of the control processes of the County of Control and County of Contr				Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a consemilar parties in Carela, I am submitting my commends on the Collar having Developme to the Coll's (Containable and Equipation Processors), While I appropriate the drift publy direction's effects to address the miss.  I credit, I must delive in capture or a group report for the februing patients in the public of the public of the containable of poor to colina expression. I am aching on the surface and whereas these controllments in the first version.  1. Every, it must like the expression and expression of the string of the s	Nathalie	C.	Quebec
- Precisionaries deconvolently provision in a saw put enterinance in course of put algorithms of processoring undertailings."  - The processor of the processor of the put of th				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
be valuating was distanted to such sile me, and my CIT. Centracted charges in lower cells all parties may be a lower plant programment on the parties of a charge of cells and may be foreign personal on a charge.  3. The concerned batte is passing because a second programment on the passing personal control of the pas				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Laby.  1. The concerned that the pating direction leads activity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche frozing services and of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings charly and unambiguously, so we don'th be accessed to these arrows.  4. Laby. I jump the inclusion of a direction to must be requisity and exhausting the patients of t				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
A Latin, Turge the scalarior of a direction to a direction to a direction to a construction, non mater where they donote to create the production of construction that the construction of the construction o				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am uberlitting my comments on the Order fasting Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed in consideration of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed meltic creation.  I Fighty, I would like the congress my strong appoint for the following guidance in the policy direction.  I Fighty I would like the congress my strong appoint for the following guidance in the policy direction rule understanging."  I Fighty I would like the congress of the congress of address and servation.  I Fighty I would like the congress of the congress of address and servation.  I Fighty I would like the congress of				Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Canada, 2 am earlying the to select an early only to select person for the Child Canada ordine creators, or least and expectation for the Child Canada ordine creators, or least and expectation for the child canada ordine creators, or least and expectation for the child canada ordine creators, or least and expectation for the child canada ordine creators, or least and expectation for the child canada ordine creators, or least and expectation for expectation ordinal canada ordine creators, or least and expectation ordinal canada ordinal cana
1. Firstly. I must dist to express my strong apport for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverably provision in any supplemental provision of the strong that is a contract of the contract	Nathan	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
a "registrateriting discoverability provisions in a wey that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [tels] CRCE is directed to to impose regulatory registratements on entire undertakings in register of programs of social media creations"; c. and that the CRCE is directed to "() regreat audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengther these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is routed that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures armed at promoting Caradian content should be voluntieny and optional to users the me, and any CRCE directed changes to how orine algorithms such should let me doubse whether the content and the register of the content of the second of the content of the con
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC chiected changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lock catery on with care men cases to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction on some fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to menter fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they done to consider a development of the control of the cont				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
sathan J. Ontario  A. Lattyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canadia, I am authoriting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks passed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the first verson.  1. First, I model like to appress my strong augustor for the plicity direction.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to make a promoting content in the public offeed on the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  3. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expressions, it is crucial that the first individual choice and the content from regulation';  4. Lattyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to inspire explaintery requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  5. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expressions, it is crucial that the first individual choice and by ORCH-directed changes to how circulated and versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and by ORCH-directed changes to how circulated and expensions out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambippounds, so we offer the second content in the policy direction is direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choice to				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Itusts you will take my feetback into consideration.  Ortario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  Firstly, I swold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the final version.  Firstly, I swold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the final version.  Firstly, I swold like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the final version.  To forther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and oppression, it is crucial that the crack of the commitment of the commitme				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I Firstly, I would like the expression yearing support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; d. c. (tha) "CRTC a directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I is crucial that the revision of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concremed that the policy direction less's carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Latally, I urgs the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no antition of the policy direction is an available to all canadian online creators, or an implementation of the direction of the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like the				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the flux version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "acciding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to I/C prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the possible, provision available. 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should left me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules from the foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. In further strengthen these commitments in the final version.  3. I'm concerned person in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and E
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: 3. The control of th	Nathan	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of procadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and intercent or notine regulator," c. I will off off. i.e. good in the control of the regulatory requirements on online regulatory in regulatory." c. I will off. i.e. and hash the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. It is a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way with an iminitates the need to alare Taylors and the
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. List you will take my feedback into consideration.  8. British Columbia  8. Columbia  8. Columbia  8. Sourcemed person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. In Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. I'm concerned mind discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings';  5. Security of the policy of the policy of the policy of the policy direction facks of programs of sooil me				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  8. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  8. Columbia  8. Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. In implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. If monoment is a work of the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  8. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I used like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I used like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I used like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I used like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should for the choose whicher to make use of them.  3. I'm concented that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be eq				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
matter where they choose to create.  British Columbia  8. Columbia  8. Columbia  Asham B. Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am ashing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRTC is directed to to impose regulations or online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available": c. 1. To further sterngthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is undividual choice and expressio British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings'; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [ they *CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting undertakings'); d. and that the CRTC is directed to in the policy direction acks commitments to in online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the not opions available. 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be then choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concented that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't ose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to expense my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect caudience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like ine, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm connended that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.			British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation", c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in sepact of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in sepact of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings was alkalite."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and may CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.	Nathan	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to notine expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," or, it is content from the policy of programs of social media creators"; of and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on continue undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; of and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concenned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is cruid that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dairly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
				4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	Nathan	,	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nathan	Р.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in away that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nathan	K.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that innimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nathaniel	D.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Nathaniel	B.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		Q	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I think Bill C-11 needs to be reworked or repealed! We need an online bill of rights. Information and its flow belongs to the people!  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nathaniel	Р.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neal	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression. I am asking you to splidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Neal		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. Law submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Equitable Provideration Deputators Exposured). While I supposite the deaft to. Exhaulting social metale users and return with regulation."  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ned	L.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nei	т.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neil	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neil	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Neil	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes be need to alter 3 registrations of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," [C the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
neil	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
NEIL		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a constant of Court I am a brillian and a constant of the Court I am a constant of the COURT (Constant by the COURT I am a constant of the court of the COURT I am a constant of the constant of the COURT I am a constant of the constant of the COU
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			Developing local instead users all content and the content of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Neil	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
TVCII		Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "Natic is directed not to impose regulation" on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neil	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neil	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neil	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Neil	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neii	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neil	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution social media users and reservant and their content from reputation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Neisha	Α.	Ontario

			As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting these comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the dra
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] 'CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unaminguousy, so we unit tobe access to these services.  A Lastly, I gree the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nelly	Υ.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nevin	b.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			mater where drug clouds to deate.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Niall	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "Cy lerspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
nicandro	G.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-	2	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nichola	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "imolementino discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding asoila media users and creators and whele rocutent from regulation";     social media users and creators and whele rocutent from the regulation";     social media users and creators and their content from the social media users and creators and their content from the social media users and creators and their content from the social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users and the social media users are social media users and the social media users are social media.
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	R.	Ontario

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  [and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) consect surface choice and unbegrouped to programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to (°) crespect audience choice and vive possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nicholas	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Hicholas		Citario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression (J am asking you to solidity and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where their choices to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that innimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "TRTC is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.  TRTC is directed not to impose equilator requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators.  TRTC is directed not to impose equilator requirements on the program of the respect of the requirements of the respect of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	S.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nicholas	Ρ.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Deibiel	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholac	c	British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolutation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from receives the options available," c. [their "CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available," d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available,"
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Personally, this bill makes me feel embarrassed to be a Canadian and adds to my concerns of the future of this country and its leadership and just how out of touch they are with Canadians.
Nicholas	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicholas	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing duscribed abung provisions in a weby tide infinites to retend of once insportants on to tolerationally object to the provision of the control of the contro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nick	L.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and 3.1 In Contention that the planty articutum that Stranty of mining articles should be regulated, and insign and incide rivesing should be required by the plant of the plant o
			matter where they choose to create.
Nick	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
_			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on noine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, and
			matter where they choose to create.
Nick	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			Description of the second
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicki	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengther these commitments to individual rule-idea and expression, it is crucial blank the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be to deprive the rules are deposited by the policy direction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to the policy direction of the policy direc
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicky	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned and dutiful person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). Please make it solid and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Please support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [bit] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. Strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nicky	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
·			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTIc is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nico	D.	Columbia	As a oncerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicola	н.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicolas	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicolas	G.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicolas	0.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
NICOLAS	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nicole	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicole	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Nicole	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicole	in.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicole	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicole	L.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicole	М.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicole	G.	Manitoba	STOP TAKING AWAY OUR FREEDOM! FREE SPEACH IS IMPORTANT. We can decide what we want to watch!
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reputation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be reclaimed optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choosed from.
			3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose secess to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nicole	F.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Back off free speech and access to content.
Nicole	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [, (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Niel	L.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nigel	R.	Prince Edward Island	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nigol	W	Quahas	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nigel	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
nigol	-	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nigei	3.	Coldinbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nigel	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nik	t.	Ontario	I am writing on the subject of the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			My concerns are not with promotion of Canadian content (which is a good thing); rather it is with the way this bill leaves open the possibility of applying to individuals on their own social media accounts, webpages, blogs, etc.
			I appreciate the following guidance: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			The CRTC was founded to regulate mass-media broadcasting (radio, TV, etc). The internet in some sense plays the same role in today's society as radio and TV did in earlier times, but in the past there was no reason to consider individuals, since there was no equivalent of a personal blog/socialmedia/website. But the current upgrading to CRTC (Online Streaming Act, Bill C-11) needs to take this into account.
			Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should not be mandatory for individual users, nor should they be forced to use any CRTC-mandated algorithms. Indeed, the scope of any regulation should be more clear. The regulations that apply to large social media corporations should not be unilaterally foisted onto small services.
			Any incentives (financial or otherwise) given to promote Canadian content should be open to all Canadian content creators. This bill should not carry any risk of unintentionally benefitting a small group of large companies who will "produce" all of the "Canadian content".
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nike	n.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nikesh	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social metal users and treature and the content from regulation, a certification of the content from regulation of the certification of the content from regulation of the certification
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be "voluntary and optional" to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let " me choose" whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			 Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nikki	D.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			used to diffice expression, I am asking you to sominy and eminate these commitments in the limit version.  1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resulation".
			c. [the] 'CXTC: is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and that the KCTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			the violating and opening to deep size (i.e., i.e., and any Cut-Cut-cut-cut-cut-cut-cut-cut-cut-cut-cut-c unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nikolai	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nikolai	м.	British Columbia	A COLUMN TO THE PROPERTY OF TH
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strenathen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nikolas	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Concerned person in Lahaba, a making you to solidify and enhance these commissions to the UKIL (Joustainable and Equitable persons and Equitable persons and a side solidify and enhance these commissions to the UKIL (Joustainable and Equitable persons and Equi
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. the RCTC is directed to "Cy' expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nina	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy [exspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			us must use CACL to indicate an CACL as indicated an CACL as indicated and commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nina	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Seed-liding on a policy and in a policy and their productions" and their productions are positived.
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online archaixings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. that that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and piche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of police undertakings clearly and <ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks danty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche toreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nioma	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			C. the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nitin	P.	Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
b. "excluding sould media users and creators and their content from regulation",
c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no marker they choose to create. 5. Lastly I believe that altering the content being pushed out to Canadians is non beneficial especially for the citizens of this country. If there was to be any alterations done, it should be optional I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I can appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",
d. and that the CKTC is directed to "Cy' respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like myself, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should allow me to choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertakings of the properties 4. Lately, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n In final, I would personally like to direct your attention towards an article from an official Government of Canada website, detailing information pertaining to a variety of legitimate freedoms and rights laws within Canada, of which are very much rel and applicable to the sixuation surrounding bill c11, which I believe the CRTC are quite breazenly and illegally activating to dodge or be made exempt from. But that's impossible, if they is supposed to be legally fair and just Canadas more acceptance of the control of the contr right?

In this://www.canada.ca/en/canadian-heritage/services/how-rights-protected/guide-canadian-charter-rights-freedoms.html#a2a

The Charter protects those basic rights and freedoms of all Canadians that are considered essential to preserving Canada as a free and democratic country. It applies to all governments – federal, provincial and territorial – and includes protects the following: fundamental freedoms, democratic rights the right to live and seek employment anywhere in Canada legal rights (life, liberty, and personal security) the official languages of Canada minority language aducation rights Canada's multicultural heritage Indigenous people's rights Fundamental freedoms – section 2 2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms: eedom of conscience and religion; eedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication; podom of postpol perception. c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and 0) freedom of association.

Under section 2 of the Charter, Canadians are free to follow the religion of their choice. In addition, they are guaranteed freedom of thought, belief and expression. Since the media are an important means for communicating thoughts and ideas, the Charter protects the right of the press and other media to speak out. Our right to gather and act in peaceful groups is also protected, as is our right to belong to an association like a trade union. These freedoms are set out in the Charter to ensure that Canadians are free to create and express their ideas, gather to the discussed from a formal control in the control in the interest of the success of a demonstrate schedy like Canadia. In a demonstray, people in must be free to discusse shades of public polity, critical segmentments and offer their own existings to a local profibers.

The only point I believe the website has potent somewhat wrong is where it cates. The rights and freedoms in the Charter are not abouted. They can be limited to protect other rights or important national values. For example, freedom of expression may be limited by laws against hate propagated or child promography. While the second half is assistancely indeed, I hereby to question and challenge the first half. It am arriad that our rights and freedoms in the Charter are nether and the control in the control i hands to ensure our internet freedoms are protected regardless of political/legislative meddling?

I personally would not want to see the internet die out because of this, and have to hope that perhaps something new may have to take it's place, as the truly free people will never give in to such ridiculous draconian lashing, but...we'll just have to see. Needs must, after all. I trust you will take my feedback into careful consideration. Thank you for your time. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 C. (the) "CNTC is directed to from the proper of the properties of the properties of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to (C) respect auditone choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 Evactuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 C. (the) CYRTC is directed to I/C prespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users to CRTC-directed hanness to how online alonorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm oncemed that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly unambiousness, owe don't lose access to these services to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks consent on miles expression. I am a side in wait in Selficial Many and instance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 be excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 c. (the) "CKTC is directed to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",
 d. and that the CKTC is directed to "Cyl respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutary and optional to users like me, and any Circ directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. 1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
c. [the] "CKTC is directed to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",
d. and that the CKTC is directed to "Cyl respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm walteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutary and optional to users like me, and any CRCT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambinously, on we don't lives excress in these services. 4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Excluding social mental users and treature and their content from regulation.  C [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
NOLAN	Υ.	Ontario
			As tax payer and Canadian citizen with supposed rights, I feel Bill C-11 tramples on many of those rights. The coziness of government and corporate interests don't fool most of us. May you receive many more comments similar to mine and understand that you are truly being tested to do the right thing. Will you?
			Also, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Excluding social mental bases and treators and their content norm regulation,  (c. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nomi	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nora	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nora	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			THIS BILL SHOULD BE SCRAPPED - GOVERNMENT SHOULD NOT BE REDUCING OR INTERFERING IN OUR RIGHTS TO FREE SPEECH & EXPRESSION!!
			IF GOVERNMENT IS NOT WISE ENOUGH TO DO SO IMMEDIATELY, THEN:  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience obice and, where ossible, increase the ootlons available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Nora	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  Most of all we must maintain a genuine spirit of not only allowing, but encouraging all Canadians to contribute their thoughts and insights that move the country forward. My grandfather was a journalist in Vienna who championed freedom of speech.
			His weekly publication of many years is used by historians to understand the history of Austria during that period. https://de.wikipedia.org/wiki/Danzers_Armee-Zeitung Carl Danzer told my mother about a French world traveler after the French evolution who predicted that there would not be a violent revolution in Britain because anyone could get onto a soap box and say whatever they wanted. It is this dynamic in Lan Danzer trool my momer about a French wond traveler after the French evolution who predicted that there would not de a violent revolution in bentalin because anytone could get onto a soap box and say whatever they wanted. It is this dynamic in free speech that moves a country forward. By deepening the understanding in the citizenry of emerging problem the resolutions tend to come from the people as a whole and the necessary consensus and cooperation ensues.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norbert	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  I do think this Bill should be revoked, or should only address censoring content that is harmful to children and other humans such as pedophelia, slavery, trafficking and sex crimes. However that seems impossible with this government so I affirm the suggested notes of this group.
			While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Noreen	W.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
norm	k.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	S.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norma	5.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norma	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norman	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			- Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norman	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norman	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norman	м.	Alberta

			, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norman	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. Lastly, the internet must be an free and open society tool and declaired an essencial service necessary for our modern technological society. It must not be impeded, controlled, or manipulated by others for political gain or profit purposes. It must be freely available the people of Canada for their personal wellbeing, development, and unique interests and for their ability to enhance society and culture.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norman	E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Norman	w.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulsition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
normand	b.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Manager		Ours!	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Normand	r.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Normand	C.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			<ul> <li>a. exculang social media users an or rearrors and meir content from regulation;</li> <li>c. (Ethe) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		D. 101.1	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Nvk	D.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
0	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ofelia	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Okrus	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Okrus	Р.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To further scheduler these communications of minimates
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Oksana	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes he need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Oleg	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Olea		Ontari	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a second down in County Law should be seen as the County District by the County of Furthern County of Fur
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to could
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Oleksii	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation", social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Oliver	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; direction of the direction of the impose regulation on inlieu undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Olivia	V	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Olivia	N.	Columbia	As a concerned content creator in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. The current version of the bill will most definitely affect those of us who rely on social media for our income. I myself am personally a disabled creator, and it's imperative that my content cannot be regulated as if I were a regular broadcaster. It would quite literally jeopardize my living situation, if the bill isn't amended with the following adjustments.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To curther strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Olivia	S.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Olivia	3.	Didiswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Olivia	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Fouritable Proadcasting Regulatory Framework). While Language the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Olivier	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to online opportunity.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Omar	м.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
O I I I I	1.74	-Zacner

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Omurbek	к.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Onur	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Orest	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
oswald	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIF" defined users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIF" defined users and creators"; c. [the] "CRIF" defined users and creators"; c. [the] "CRIF" defined users and creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Otto	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Otto	J.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei   "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Oum	н.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		22220	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to suprass my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provision in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ovidiu	D.	Quebec

			·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			Developing local instead ideas are consistent of the consistency
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ovidiu		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ovidia		Olitario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Owen	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastyl, I upset be inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Owen	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paddy	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			"including osciour-anility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of productasings;     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. Io further strengthers to disvolution to contract the
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Page	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to late" algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "evulution social media users and reators and their content from penulation in the provision of
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pagliaro	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and I'd TRC is directed to 'to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and I'd TRC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Pam	C.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			b. Excluding social metal assets an oreating and unter content from regulation; c. (the) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pam	Α.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and treators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pamela	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of troadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tuens and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media tuens and creators and their content from regulation," contains the content of the content from regulation, and the content from regulation, and the second results of the content from regulation, and the content from regulation, and the the CRTL's directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pamela	v.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pamela	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the palicy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei   CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks drivino small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pamela	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Pamela		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			There are some steps forward on limiting potential abuse of the bill, but a great deal more needs to be done in the final plan.
			I want my ability to choose the content I want to see to be upheld and respected. Surely that is my right in a demorated society.  Ido not need the Government, via the CRTC, to equipate my choices. The last thing we need from this Government is more regulation and censorship. Even a past President of the CRTC had grave concerns about the censorship that will be imposed by this bill.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; YES b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; YES
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". YES  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. YES
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. YES
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. YES
Pamela	к.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rameia	K.	Coldinola	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. To strengthen the commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a citizens' representative to inform directly and independently the citizens for fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Panagiotis	K.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			As a coach and online content creator this is all going to greatly impact my livelihood and I hope that you can understand how important your decisions are in supporting or working against hard working, tax paying citizens like myself and our families.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paola	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  As a coach and online content creator this policies will greatly impact my livelihood and I hope you understand just how important your decisions are in supporting or working against hard working, tax paying citizens like myself and our families.
01		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paola	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paraic	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3. The Concentred used use points, direction in the Concentred use of the points of the Concentred used used to the Concentred used used used used to the Concentred used used used used used used used us matter where they choose to α reate.
Parisa	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social medial users and creators and meir content from regulation;     c., telp "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		D-ini '	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
L .	L.	British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverbility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. excluding solar interest uses and creations and uter content non-regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Parker	Р.	British Columbia	As a concerned access in Canada I are submitting museumments on the Order Jesuign Directions to the CPTC (Surthinable and Equiphala Broadcasting Roughbay Examples All Millia I appropriate the death college directions of effects to address the distribution of the concerned access in Canada I are submitted as a concern
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that the minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CNTC" is directed to "CIC" respects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CIC" respects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. CNTC is directed to "CIC" respects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. CNTC is directed to "CIC" respects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. CNTC is directed to "CIC" respects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. CNTC is directed to "CIC" respects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options are validated in the contract of the contract o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Parm	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Qr respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pascal	E.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Qr respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
pasquale	p.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators." d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
PAT	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Pat	K.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pat	н.	Saskatchewa n

			A comment of County Comments of the Order Torrison Street to the County Comments of County Comments of County Comments of County
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "evulution so rial media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>exculand social media users an oreastors and meir content from regulation',</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Pat	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Det	N.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rat	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pat	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			This must remain inviolate as a principle of democracy.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pat	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pat	F.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and whele content from regulation";
			Developing coal metal cases and reservoir and metal content from regime could reservoir and metal cases and reservoir and metal content from regime content from regime spect of programs of social media creators";      deal of the the CRTC is directed by "(c)" respect audience choice and where possible, in crease the options available;
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Patricia	K.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Patricia	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbox and their content form penulation".
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it extent norm regulator), requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	3.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience shoice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience shoice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience shoice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requisted, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	Р.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Q' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and recrease a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	H.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Coline lay person in Calabac, I am Cala
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; c. (the!) CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it kie me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Patricia	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	r.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; c. (teh) CRCI distreted not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasth, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, large the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no match where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c.(tel) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation "requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patricia	М.	n n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. C-11 is a slippery slope into authoritarianism and tyranny. I would sincerely hope this bill dies but our government seems determined to censor our free speech and manipulate what its citizens may Patricia	н.	Alberta	know about. Appalling.
· uurula	- 11

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Patrick	м.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rutick		Nova Scotta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	Р.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (?) crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(?) respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darking on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambibuously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	K.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not bimpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) crespect adulgatione choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil amedia users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil andeals users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionized choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionized choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	м.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooila media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d., and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" cressect, adulgationer choice and, where possible, increase the oottons available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choics and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	м.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CXRIC is directed not to impose regulation "requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter wine user vision to dente.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social media users and creators and their content from regulation ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";      d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patrick	C.	British Columbia
			As a Canadian citizen, netizen, and content creator, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While I appreciate that the internet 2.0, i.e. the corporate-owned and -controlled social media internet, is a dumpster fire, it is important that the CRTC not throw more fuel on it by adding unaccountable government manipulation to the already-opaque and frustrating corporate manipulation of the mathematical algorithms that control what mere users can be fed on their feeds.  I am very concerned that C-11 has apparently done very little homework to establish a common understanding and definition of what streaming and social media actually, practically mean. Looking from the outside in, it appears that the CRTC have Tail very concerned that of a final application of the control of
			I would definitely support policy that makes Canadian content more discoverable, but without altering algorithms. It would also be critical to exclude social media users and creators from regulation or requirements to create "Canadian" content (which would need to be defined as simply and clearly as it is for broadcast media).
			Clarity and definition regarding the services and networks that would come under this legislation and regulation will be more than necessary. It will be extremely important, as I said earlier, to not treat these intermet distribution networks as if they were broadcast media. After all, for many of us digital content creators and social media users, the internet has provided us a way to distribute our work without having to genuflect at the gates of traditional broadcast media; gates which are becoming fewer in number and increasingly fortified. The internet at its best allows creators to ignore gatekeepers both corporate and governmental and reach our fellow citizens directly and without interference.
Patrick	G.	Quebec	Regards, Patrick G. A concerned Canadian citizen, I submit my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I write to ask that you solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First, there is my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction excludes across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be very generally voluntary and optional, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let users choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Last, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			For these reasons, 1 ask that you take my feedback into consideration in preparing the final version of C-11.
Patrick	М.	Quebec	Thank you for the opportunity to submit comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			First, I would like to express my strong support for the fact that the CRTC is directed to "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			To further strengthen this commitment to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			Thank you for considering my comments.
Patrick	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patryk	C.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Please, a free & open Internet for al of us! I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patsy	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osical media users and creators and their content from requiation", b. "excluding osical media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Patti	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the Inial version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	C.	Quebec

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Excluding social metale users and user and section and an expect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	c.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creaturs and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
paul	d.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter, where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
paul	a.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Paul	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	T.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social metale uses a not learned a few that the content from regulation, " C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Paul	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes be need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing social metal users and treators and user content norm regulation;  (E the) "CRTs directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks draity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
PAUL	L.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Exacional social metale uses a not learned send rule inclination regulation, "  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	C.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	C.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	В.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. "By "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Doesd to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbors and their content from regulation" in the content of the
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	C.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Paul	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	M.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "Natic is directed not to impose regulation" on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Paul	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Paul	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing Social metal assets an or teatures and unter Content from regulation;  C [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			D. exculaing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;     C. thei "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	v.	Ontario	a uses you mit use, my decisions may defined into definite into the many design of the ma

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that eliminates the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			us must use CACL to indicate an (1) respect advances must make a special properties of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation"; or social media users and creators and their content from requiation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unaminguousy, so we unit tobe access to these services.  A Lastly, I upper the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			PS. Trudeau, you need to step down.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	N.	Manitoba	Before the form portion of this message which I do endorse, the most important message we Canadians want you to hear is WE ARE NOT CHILDREN. We are grown ass adults. WE will decide what we want to see or hear or not see or not hear. If we do something ILLEGAL come get us, we deserve it. Otherwise, leave us alone to live our lives.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1CRTC is directed to (c) respect undertake only where possible, increase the options available.*  The contraction of the contracti
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paul	Α.	Alberta
			I am submitting these comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While the draft policy direction moves in the right direction to address the risks posed to online expression, I want to see these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
			Exclusing such means uses an user content non-regulation;     (the) "CRI directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risk driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we
			A. Please include direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Thanks very much.
Paul	G.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online metakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paula	Α.	Island	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and ennance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Paula	B.	Brunswick

Service of the control of the contro				As a concentral corresponding the control of the Code Technique to
Part
Part				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
No. 2 - Sept. Sept				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Service Servic
Hart Service of the control of the c
Part				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Fig. 1. Sept. 1. Sept				I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Part	Paula	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Reset   Property of the proper				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
Fig. 1. Sec. 1				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
The state of the s				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
Level 1				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
No. 1. The state of the state we will also the state of t				4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
The control of the co
Fig. 1. PSI	Paula	G.	Ontario
Part In the Company of Assembling systems in a very fire morner to read a size of systems of industrial programs of product mode control.  In the company of				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Policy Collins of School and Control of Collins of School and Scho				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
In the contraction of the project of the contraction of the contractio				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Fig. 1. The control of the control o				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Internal transfer without the control to make.  Internal transfer without the control to make.  In the control operation of control operation (control operation).  In the control operation (control operation).  In the control operation (control operation).  In the control operation (control operation) and the control operation (control operation).  In				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
No. 1 Proposed in the control proposed of the control
As a commend general in classification of processing and a commendation of the commend				I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Figure   The properties of t	Paula	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Pulse  B. Technique (sold mindes auex and creations and their content from regulating)  C. and for that the CPTCs deficited by				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
Polis In Figure designation to extract Anguest to end contract and the first working of the public direction rate on a cross the town department and extraction entirely. Any measures extend at primating Canadian content should be replaced, and miss divining unail and mich foreign services and of Canada. The first direction must define the appropriate scope of online working casely and utilitization, as no definition of a primating casely and utilitization, as no definition of a primating casely and utilitization, as no definition of a primating casely and utilitization, as no definition of a primating casely and utilitization, as no definition of a primating casely and utilitization, as no definition of a primating casely and utilitization of a primating casely and casely as the primating casely as the primating case of				b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id induced not impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. Imm concerned that the policy direction lacks during on which nervices should be regulated, and risks driving small and notice foreign services and of Caneda. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of value undertakings chearly and ununtipopously, as on which the inclusion of a direction to entire far and equal treatment for all Canedan crime creators. Any financial or promotion apportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canedan crime creators, no matter than the control of the c				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
A Lasty, surple included or a direction to searce fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.    Probation				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Finish British Columbia As a concerned grown in Casestal, I am substitute or you make you for the columbia passes on the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks passes from the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks passes from the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks passes from the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is called by the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is called by the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is called by the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is called by the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is called by the CRTC (Stataneable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions is death or make the property available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  Public No.  As a concerned person in Cleada, I am submitting my comments on the Order basing Directions to the CRTC (Stataneable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Farmework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks and content and co				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Publish  B. Columba  B. Columb
posed to online expression, I am acting you to soldly and enhance these commitments in the first version.  1. Farily, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction of a disportance of bread-acting undertakings.  2. In Fully, Would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at premoting Canadian content should be regulated, and rules deviated by the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at premoting Canadian content should be regulated, and rules deviated the rule because whether the rules are in the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at premoting Canadian content should be regulated, and rules deviated the rules because whether the rules where they choose to read the rules are interested in the policy direction in rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at premoting Canadian content should be the rules and the rules are in the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at premoting Canadian content should be regulated, and rules deviated the rules are included to the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at premoting Canadian content should be ruled to the policy direction and all rules are included to the rul	Paula	В.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
a "implementating discoverability provisions in a way that minimize this need by all deportment of programs of another model or received in the CRIC is derived to fill or programs of another model or received in the CRIC is derived to fill or programs of another model or received in the CRIC is derived to fill or programs of another model or received in another than the CRIC is derived to fill or programs of another model or received in a model or received in another than the final version of the policy derived on a received to be voluntary and optional to users its me, and any CRIC deriveded changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy derived back or should be regulated, and risks driving and risks and received a received and r				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy" crepeted audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is routed above viburdary and optional to users like ma, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should left me choose whether to make use of them.  3. In monoment that the policy direction is understanding clearly and unanthogously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Latty), I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no nature where they drobes to create.  First you will lake my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Criter Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am aliality you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the first a trend.  5. First you will lake the capter my trend of the policy direction is consideration.  5. First you will lake the capter my trend of the policy direction inclined and provided the content from regulation, or content from regulation;  6. Lake you will take my feedback into consideration.  6. Lake you will take my feedback into consideration.  7. Lake you will take my feedback into consideration.  8. Jun concerned that the policy direction is an expression of the policy direction is content provided to be replaced and provided to be required to the policy direction is content provided to content from regulation;  8. Lakely, I usual bis the capter my strong support for the followi				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resulation", social media users and creators and their content from resulation", be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. If m concerned that the policy direction that the policy direction to ensure fair and equal reatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or premotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.  4. Latally, I urps the includion of a direction to ensure fair and equal reatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or premotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Intraty ow will take my Redback into consideration.  2. Intraty to will take my Redback into consideration.  2. In Fight, I smoll discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. Excluding local time or surps and provision in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  4. Excluding local interest and their content from regulation',  5. In Central creations and their content from regulation',  6. In Central creations and their content from regulation',  7. In content of that the policy direction in matter than the policy direction in the content of the pol				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
unambiguously, so we don't lois access to these services.  4. Lately, Lurge the includion of a direction be ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Paula  V.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firetly, I sould like the capters my strong apport for the following guidance in the policy direction.  2. The Faculturing social media users and creation and other contents of the policy direction.  3. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"  4. Paculturing social media users and restrict non regulatoring.  5. Paculturing social media users and restrict from regulatoring, in respect of programs of social media creators,"  6. due to the the CRTC is directed to "C() respect audience droice and operations, its crudit has the final version.  7. In concerned that the policy direction is social to the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned the includion of a discretion in essential to include a discretion in essential to estimate the policy direction is social to the final version.  4. Lately, I grap the includion of a discretion of essentials.  6. Lately, I grap the includion of a discretion in essentials.  6. Lately, I grap the includion of a d				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Paula V.  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to conline expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Firstly, 2 mount like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  4. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  5. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  6. Firstly, 2 mount like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  6. Limits of the control of the policy direction in the polic				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Paula V. Columbia A a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pased to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firthy, I need like to express in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pased to online expression, I is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the echoses whether to make use of them.  3. This concerned that the policy direction lacks drafty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lataly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create expression, it is crucial than the final version.  4. Lataly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression; I am asking you to solidify a				matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the land various.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to allar algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed to be "Crt is entered to the impose regulator requirements on entire the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to ornate.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the final version.  2. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  3. "I'm concerning discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to aller algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social medi	Paula	v.
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNT cs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNT cs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNT cs directed to "Cy respect danges to how dand, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how disploit that where the choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarily on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the fol				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The further strengthen they concerned that the policy provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  2. The further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction as out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian cont				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3.1 mr concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, would like to express my atrons guapant for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The properties of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, would like to express my atrons guapant for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The properties of the CRTC is directed and their content from regulation's content and their content from regulation's content and the content from regulation's content and the CRTC is directed to 'Cyc respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the fi				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  1 trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  8 hitish Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction as "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Qr respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and ny CRTC-directed changes to how disportimes work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose acces
Paula H. Columbia  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (tire) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (for paspet audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evoluntary and optional to users like me, and ny CRTC-directed changes to how hould let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction of a dire				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Paula P. Columbia As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter options for proadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory." d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possibly in respect of programs of social media creators."; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and audience choice and audience choice and audience choice and audience choice				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need a later algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to Vice respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.	Paula	н.	British Columbia
a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT.c is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT.c is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and ny CRT-directed changes to how bould let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastyl, urgue the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.				d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
matter where they choose to create.				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
				I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Part   Company   Part				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Let the Late Comment of the property of the comment of the pro				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", ground to be a social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
Fig. 1. Part of the common and the c				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Learning to the company of the compa				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Part
Services of the control of the contr				- Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
And Services of the Company of the C			British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Language of the Control of the Contr	Paulina	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
And the second control of the process of the proces				1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
Has been provided to the service of specific to				b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ file_  Text_S is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Service of the servic				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be woluntary and notional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Language of the second				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Part				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no services of the company of the compa property of the property of th	Pauline	Р.		As a concerned page of a constant I am submitting my comments on the Order Iregian Directions to the OTT (Sustainable and Equitable Grandswithin Department of Department of the Arthropic of Affect to address the circle.
Service of the control of the contro				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Company of the Comp				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", the solutions and optionals used springer has been cline graphings who doubted am of closes whether to make used and clines. The limited deviation make the springer has been cline and provided in regulation of the clinical in the springer has been seen of a financial in the springer has bee				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
unbidge, a. Land, 1, 1945 the consequence of action to specific services.  Land 1, 1945 the consequence of action to specific services of action to specific services of actions to specific services of actions to specific services.  Nation 7 Oseron 1  Land 1, 1945 the consequence parameter in Consequence (i.e. the specific services) and the consequence of actions to specific services and the specific servi				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
International field in processing the processing of the processing				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
The part of table any extended into considerations.  The part of table any extended into considerations.  The part of table and process in Causage I are a section of the Control Insurance Discourage to the COTE (Sustainable and Equation & Boundarity Regulatory Framework). While I approximate the drift policy direction's effects to address of the reads of the part of process of the Control Insurance Discourage Insurance Insurance Insurance Discourage Insurance Ins
As concerned express (accessed, 1 am submitting in your connects on the Confer Employ Exercision to the Confer Employer.)  1. ENGL. 1. ENGL. 1 am submitted in your connects on the Confer Employer.  1. ENGL. 1. ENGL. 1 am submitted in your connects on the Confer Employer.  1. ENGL. 1. ENGL. 1 am submitted in your connects on the Confer Employer.  1. ENGL. 1 am submitted in your connects on the Confer Employer.  1. ENGL. 1 am submitted in your connects on the Confer Employer.  2. Expression of the Confer Employer.  2. Expression of the Confer Employer.  3. It measured that the pink direction leads of the your connects on the Confer Employer.  3. It measured that the pink direction leads of the your connects on the Confer Employer.  4. Expression of the Confer Employer.  5. It may be entired on the confer and qualification entires on the Confer Employer.  4. Expression of the Confer Employer.  5. It may be entired on the confer and qualification entires on the Confer Employer.  5. It may be entired on the confer and qualification entires on the Confer Employer.  6. Expression of the Confer Employ Performance	Pauline	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
- The common decimal control of the security of the control of the				1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following auidance in the policy direction:
he voluntary and action of a users like me, and my CTC circuted changes to be continued processes.  3. The concentred that the policy describes belocking to any interest and any of the continued of the personal content of				b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
1. The concerned that the goldy direction less active or winds should be requiseded, and risks driving small and rache foreign services and of Carella. The final direction must define the appropriate scape of online understance, and matter services by the control of the public of the control of the public of				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
A Latin, Targe the Inclusion of a direction to answer far and equal treatment for all Canadian orinine creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BIE C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian orinine creators, no matter them they drose to correct the provided or correction.  The National Section 1 The				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Name  Resource				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concerned person in Cassada, I am authorition or yourness control to Cited Facusing Discretions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the drift policy direction's efforts to address the risks profession of other expression, I am alway part to soliding with enhancement on the first an expect of programs of social media created as a "International Confession" in the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the drift policy direction is enhanced as an increasing and their creates in the policy direction in the policy dir
1. Firsty. 1 model date to express my strong apport for the Monley guidance in the policy direction.  a. "Implementing discoverably provisions in an any life minimises the need to alter algorithms of productions."  b. "excluding social model states and creation and their content from regulators,"  d. and that the CRIC's discretic chiese and, where socials, increase the option avoidable,"  d. and that the CRIC's discretic chiese and, where socials, increase the option avoidable,"  d. and that the CRIC's discretic chiese and, where socials, increase the option avoidable,"  d. and that the CRIC's discretic chiese and, where socials, increase the option avoidable,"  a. The concerned that the policy direction includes on the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed all promoting Ganadian content should be requisted, and raiss driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings chearly and unambigooutly, zo we don't be access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BIII C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust, I would like to express my drong apport to the fell	Pauline	В.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
a "implemental glacoverability provisions in a swy that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadstating undertakings";  c. [ten] CXTC is directed to to ("propet addinger organization continued and contained";  d. and that the CXTC is directed to ("propet addinger organization contained and contained";  d. and that the CXTC is directed to ("propet addinger organization contained and properties of contained and properties and contained and properties and contained and properties and contained and properties and properties and contained and properties
2. To further programme three commitments to individual cloric and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the polity direction rules cate across-the based algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and goldenic to sear like time, and vCTC-directed charges to the online algorithms work should be used with the most of this access to these services.  3. I'm concerned that the polity direction tests clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canadia. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, see we don't like committees in the committees in the committees of the committees of the final version.  It must you will take my feedback into consideration.  Ontario  As a concerned parson in Canada. The submittee of the consideration of a direction of a direction to estudy available to all Canadian online creators, no makes where they chose to create.  It must you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned parson in Canada. The plant direction is an ability with online committees in the final version.  As a concerned parson in Canada. The ability my comments on the Order familian Direction to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction is a "imperententing discoverability promission is not exploit from final version."  1. Firstly, I must like the CRITC direction of the following program of the following direction in the policy direction is a direction used of the committees of the final version.  2. To further transglator these control to the policy direction used of the policy direction used of the policy direction used to the policy direction to the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction in the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction in the policy direction in the policy direction in the policy direction in t				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarky on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambipuously, so we direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or premotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  A a concentration of the control of the				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lastly, I large the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no nature where they choose to create.  The second of the control				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am alking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  In Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  In Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction.  In Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction or such as a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements to individual choice and expression, i. is crucial that the vision of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian cortent should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  I. Trust concerned the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I Firstly, I would like the express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pool to office separation to ensure fair and equal treatment for the first version.  I Firstly, I would like the express my strong suppo				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
As a concorned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, 1. would like to access my strong support for the following updates: in the policy direction:  2. The presenting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  3. The CRIT CRIT is directed in content from regulation,  3. In concerned that the policy direction locks dearly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings the specific intensive the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choics and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithm work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. The concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you	Pawel	к.	Ontario
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings?", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," cd. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I'urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  8. British Columbia  8. British Columbia  8. British Columbia  8. British Columbia  9. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter altors and where the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Thro concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Shritish  C. Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I used like to expense my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Timplementing discoverably provision of the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. Firstly, I used like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  4. Lastly, I used the the CRTC is directed to 'Cy crease caudience choice and where possible, increase the options available'.  5. Timplementing the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British  C. Columbia  C. Columbia  C. Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementaling discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed to to impose regulations on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators",  d. and that the CRIC is directed to individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further stengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it and expression, it access the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm connended that the policy di				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Seritah Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [ the] CRIC is directed to in implementation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it availables to all canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  3. I'm connented that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should b
matter where they choose to create.  British C. Columb  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available. 2. To further stengthen these commitments to individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available. 3. The concerned that the policy direction lacks called that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. The concenned that the policy direction lacks darily on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they cho				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction for an expression of the resolution of the content from regulators o				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to exposes my strong upunor for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *RecLuding social media uses and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(or prespect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.	Payton	C.	British Columbia
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect caudionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> <li>If mo connect that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> <li>Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.</li> <li>I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.</li> </ol>				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator prougirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tirn concented that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
				matter where they choose to create.
	Pedro	Α.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social metal uses and creations and user control regulatory. From the control of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pedro	N.	British Columbia	As a concerned across in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order Isruina Directions to the CPTC (Surtinable and Equilibrium Properties). As a concerned across in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order Isruina Directions to the CPTC (Surtinable and Equilibrium Properties).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provision in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'excluding local media users and creators and their content from regulation; discount of the content of the content of the content of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation; discount of the content of the content of programs of social media creators"; discount of the content of the content of the content of programs of social media creators"; discount of the content of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Penni	G.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Penny	В.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "fc) (respect adultance choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Penny	м.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Perry	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (-lthe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			J. In Concerned used to planty direction indicated using the repulsive severes should be regulated, and last during shall also include integrated used to Canadia. The limits direction must define the appropriate scope to diffine under the appropriate s
			matter where they choose to create.
Perry	F.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulation yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final exposition of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.
perry	L	Saskatchewa n	A dast you mit date my resolute allows. Into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuino Direction to the COTE (Surbinship and Equitable Provided in Survey).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sorial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Excluding social metal users and serious and other locations are supported by the company of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Perry	T.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Perry	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pete	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	F.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	н.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	C.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Date		Ontovi	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	D.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "exclusions orial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Excluding social metale users and retained and retained in regulation, "  C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; a provision of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Peter	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	M.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Peter	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Peter	l,	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Jesuine Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Fertilable Development Personal August 1 according to the Jestine Development of the CRTC (Sustainable and Fertilable Development Personal August 1 according to the Jestine Development of the CRTC (Sustainable and Fertilable Development Personal August 1 according to the Jestine Development Personal August 1 according to the Jes
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Excluding social metal users and serious and other locations are supported by the company of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Peter	К.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	м.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c( the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	L.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ file) "CRT's directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Peter		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned nerson in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CPTF (Systainable and Envishble Providenting Boundary). Securior Boundary Comments Mille I supposite the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helder content from requisition";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>a. exculunis social means users and treators and metr content from regulation',</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concent that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	w.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users, and rearbors and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and nether content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Peter	ī.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  City of PCRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed volce regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed on 'City respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and held rountent from requiation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	v.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	s.	British Columbia
			I have spoken to many people about C-11, C-18, etc. etc.  No Canadian I have heard from is in favor of any law that seeks to censor the internet. In the next election, the Liberal party will discover the degree of dissatisfaction felt by Canadians.
Peter	K.	Quebec	The Liberal party isn't listening to Canadians and the Liberal party is not acting in the best interests of Canadians. We will remember, as a concerned person in Canada, I am truty concerned that Bill C-11, although, I expect well intentioned, is going to be a disaster that will Isolate Canadians from Canadian News. Should, I as a Canadian, have to purchase a VPN to enable me to watch
			Canadian News on YouTube, Bill C-11 would have failed me and all Canadians, and should be scrapped. I hope and expect that Bill C-11 will be repealed when there is a change of Government, and I support this.
	_		Bills like C-11 and others, has caused me to lose confidence in the LPC, and I can no longer support their re-election in a future Federal Election.
Peter	T.	Ontario	Peter T. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I support guidance in the following manner:
			a. minimize the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. totally excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation, c. CRTC should never direct regulatory requirements in respect of programs of social media creators; d. CRTC should respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. It on on support measures almost a promoting Canadian content which should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Policy should be very clear on which services should be regulated, and avoid driving small and nich beforeign services out of Canada and avoid losing access to such services.
			4. I support fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators with any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	т.	Ontario	and you me and the control to the co
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			poses to diministrative supersonal positions of the supers
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoulation".
			c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social aneila creators"; d. the] *CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect suddirect ochioc and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
eter	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Colice intellegers in California and a state of the Californi
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  C [the] CRIS idercated not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			se vouche y and option and uses a lake in gent only UCF or uncled uninges to involve segurinist wars should be relief to indeed set unine used to interest or interest to the propriet segurinist wars should be required, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			2.1 If Controlling Line to pulsey directions in the Control with minimal entered another to require experience and interest of the Control with the Control wit
			4. Lastly, I urge the indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			It trust you will alke my feedback into consideration.
eter	L.	Alberta
			As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be a content of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I start you will know you only clear pendidness to eter		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ctei	L	Colullibid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am assing you to soliulary and enhance these commitments in the inal version.  I. Firstly. I would like to excress my strong support for the following usidance in the oblicy direction:
			1. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimum grant and the placy unecutor."  1. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimum grant and considerability provisions in a very that minimum grant provisions of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition,"  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition."
			<ul> <li>a. exclusing social medial users and creators and their content from regulation;</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			o. and mast the UKIL is directed to (1) respect adjustment offices and, where possible, increase the options available it.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm.
			2. I to further strengther and application to use silkerine, soft and such as a property of the
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
eter	N.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concening terror in Linka and its improvement of the Christian and the Christia
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. excluding social metion bases and useful safe useful regulation; c. [the] "CRTS directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
neter		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
peter		Colditible	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Peter N E	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reputation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
PETROS	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTIc is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Petur	Р.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Phil	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Phil	S.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Phil	l.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and where content from regulation ",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; d. and 1* text RCTC is directed to Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction nales out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Phil	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			osed to time expression, I am eating you to sound and eminate uses communication in the many eason.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unaminguousy, so we unit tobe access to united access to
			matter where they choose to create.
PHII		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rnic	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; (Ethe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C. (Ind.) Vict. is Silvertian that Online preparation (see a continue to the CRT is directed to "(c) respect additional continue to the CRT is directed to "(c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to mese services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
D1. 11		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Phil	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Seculuring social media users and creators and their content from guidation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Philip		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rillip	n.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lasty, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Philip	N.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philip	N.	Alberta
Ĺ			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philip	S.	Alberta	a visite for this same my recorded illia anisate industrial and in a same for the s

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philip	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes he need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c] fiel "CRIT is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthese commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction use of the policy direction use of the policy direction use of the policy direction used to the policy direction
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insective where usery closes or desired.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philip	R.	British Columbia
			In my view of C-11 the bill has a serious issue with the fact that it is not constitutional. In the regard to attempting to regulate platforms online there are several issues to do with C-11 that makes it so.  1) The attempt to regulate online platforms that do not have any infrastructure of any kind in Canada has a serious issue with jurisdiction. Canada has no say in what US companies do. Most if not all of their infrastructure exists in another country that is not Canada and government has no Jurisdictional right to regulate them.
			<ol> <li>Attempting to regulate services that are built using a software platform is also a serious issue. Not only is the content created protected speech so is the platform itself. The speech used to build these platforms exists privately on the platforms servers and as a result the CRTC this does not have jurisdiction because the speech is not broadcast to anyone. Thus this also makes regulating such platforms completely unenforceable and a gross violation of the privacy of the platforms developers.</li> </ol>
			3) Every Canadian has the right under section 28 of the charter to the following b) freedom of thought, belief opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication
			This law attempts to restrict Canadians freedom of expression, freedom of the press and other media of communication. It is a gross violation of the charter and it is a matter of time before the courts strike it down. It is an attack on Canadian values.  The CRTC has no right to be regulating anything that this law covers and as such it should be struck down.
Philip	N.	British Columbia	Bill C-11 is an extremely offensive attack on the rights and freedoms of the Canadian people and has no place in Canada.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online alornthms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Philip-Olivier	R	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoversality provision in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philippe	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philippe	т.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philippe	N.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
PHILIPPE	C.	Quebec

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. I am submittion my comments on the Order Issuino Directions to the CPTY (Sustainable and Equilable Developed Deve
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the rolivouring gluciance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Philippe	L.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Philippe	H.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Phillip	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to unine expression; I am asking you to soliuny and eminance tiese communities in the linear ensuin.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CNC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Phillip	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Usay), and the inclusion of a local control of issue rail and equal resultent to an Carabian of mine deators. Any financial of profitorior opportunities deated by this C113 implementation mass the equally available of an activation of the profit of the control of the contr
Philomena	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter be invalidated in the policy of the provisions of a way that minimizes the need to alter a policy of the provisions of a way that minimizes the need to alter the provisions of the provision of the provisions of the p
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pier-luc	V.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to unline expression; I am asking you to solounly after elimenters in the linear ension.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoversority provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of processing uncertaintings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to to "Cyr respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Diorlucio	D	0

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). Wile I have persanol issues
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discovershilty provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter sloporthms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei   CRIF is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase and not decrease the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving smaller and more niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction NEEDS define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation MUST be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I serenely hope that you will take my feedback into consideration.
Piero	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Pierre	G.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs disdirection to the impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the indusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pierre	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unantinguously, so we unit user access to unservestives.  4. Lastly, I unvert be incision of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, noy financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pierre	I.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pierre	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously. so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pierre	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Canadian content will rise or fall on its' own merits. Any attempt to subsidize this is doorned to failure.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pierre	F.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter allographisms of proadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIF" deficiency is deficient from regulation", c. [the] "CRIF" deficiency is deficient on the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pierre-Luc M	1.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (KTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pina T.		Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Please consider my			I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and following Bill C11 comments			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter to / for the government'			where they choose to create.
s consultation efforts nt's E.		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
errorts nt's E.		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to *(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Pooja Y		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Portia W	٧.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Prasad G	i.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks according to the property of the comment of the property
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Drachant V		British	and year of the second

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding Social medical bases and testions and rate includes the interest of programs of social media creators";  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Premila	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Preston	М.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implement soical media users and reators and reators and restored to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding and creators are creators and creators and creators and creators are creators and creators and creators and creators are creators and creators
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Quenten	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy: respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Quentin	3.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I feel that the CRTC is an antiquated system that should be dismantled. The CRTC has no business regulating anything, especially the internet.  I'm sure that my views are shared by many Canadians, I feel that we are mostly adults and don't require a regulating entity to keep us "safe" from the boogeyman. Do you not have better things to do with our money?
Ouentin	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Quentin	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS ideracted not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Jastiv. Lune the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Rill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators.
			matter where they choose to create.
r	s.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes be need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
R	Ρ.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS its directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
P	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
R	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
R Gerald	L.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
K Gerald	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed by "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
R.	м.	Ontario
			I believe that this Bill amounts to censorship of my personal communications, and as such, contravenes the Canadian Charter of Rights, and Canadian law in general. The Internet is an unrestricted, free access platform for International communication, and as such, abould not be restricted or controlled by any government, anywhereMy choices of input ad viewing are based on my interests and not which country the freeds originate fromIf the feed is information from Canadian sourcesor much the betterIf Canadians produce quality material, it will find its place in the International marketwithout Government controlsI Certain countries regulate what their citizens can see on Internet media(eg. China)Canada should be above and beyond efforts to address the risks posed to online expressions; I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the VersionC. (Cartain Countries See and Canadian Bear of Canad
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
R.	к.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rab	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rachek	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rachel	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rachel	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rachel	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Radek	Z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Radoslaw	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRIT is directed to "for respect audiquince choice and, where possible, prorease the ootions are waitable".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Radouene	В.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rae	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			Doesd to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final vestion.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
raffi	h.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. de "PCRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. dn and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience rotice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rahman	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
n-i		0-4	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raj	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			ac volumely aim opposited uses a like rine, and any CKP Charlest claringes or low former augments work should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raj	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rajiv	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		STRUITO	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy flection lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rajkumar	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [utc] whice is under in our impose regulatory requirements on online understands in respect to programs to stock include a stock indicated and that the CRTCs is directed to "(c) respect a diagnet a choice and (where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rakesh	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concentral correspond correspond to the Control of the Contro
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ralph	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ralph	,	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kaipii	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ralph	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ralph A	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRI's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rameshwar	J.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rami	h.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Damin	c	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ramsey	b.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ranald	D.	Columbia	Although this message was partially pre-composed as part of an Open Media request, I have modified it to reflect my thoughts.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", ("*Porticularly important!)
			b. Exclusing social mental bases and creators and one content norm regulation, (""and cutaming implicants)  C. thei "CRTS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". This point also is (particularly important!)
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. As a Canadian with friends and family abroad as well as travel interests, it is important that my access to information originating from other countries be maintained.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Randa	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding social metal assets an oreative and unter content from regulation; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randall	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Randall	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
. varradii		. wood to	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randall	N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Contented person in California, I am submitting in Continents or the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC Constantable and Equitable production regulatory Prantework). While I appreciate the draft pointy direction's entries to aduress the risks posed to confirm a saking yout to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation"; social media users and creators and their content from requiation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randall	0.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
440			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
randur44@ mail.com	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			7. Lasty, 1 uge du la requision un a visuation de risulte rail and equal deadless to all canadian visible deadless. Any minimater of provincion upportunities deadles by all C-113 implementation must be equally available to all canadian visible deadless, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	Н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
RANDY	V.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concentration lacks cannot be policy direction lacks carry on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininins of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininins of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininins of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininins of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininins of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambinining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambinining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and imambining of the appropriate scope of online u
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks need to notice processing. I am action you to collection and expenses the contraction of th
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	c	Manitoha	a was you rini (and in) requires into without doubt.

			y
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			us min take the CAC is surfaced on (1) regular sources to unknown to mine pursainer, increase are uppoints eveninger.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			5. IT United that the placty direction lacks clarity of minint services sincure or regulated, and rasks univing small and incirc to regulated. As the plact of the placty direction lacks clarity of minint services in the minint of the placty and university of the placty and uni
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Randy		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
randy		Coldinoid	The statements below are a suggested form letter from Open Media of which I somewhat agree with as they would 'lessen' the negative impact from Bill C-11. Therefore I will leave them below as a 'band aid' solution or 'Plan B' if you will.
			However, 'my' actual position is that Bill C-11, C-18 et are straight up censorably policies. They must be repealed to protect our Chapter 28 freedoms of speech and expression. This country is steamrolling towards outright Socialism or a "basic communist dictatorship" as Tundeaus ous strongly admires. I was born in the land of the free and an watching that be destroyed.
			Repeal these horrendous and very negative pieces of legislation.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition";</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	В.	Manitoba
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation."</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Randy	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Exclusing social means users and creatures and unter content roun regulation;  (the) "CNE" is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Randy	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Excluding social metale users and retained and retained in regulation, "  C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raphael	В.	New Brunswick	As a pageomed pageon in Chanda. I am pulmitting my commonte on the Order Jesuing Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Equilible) producesting Equalitating Examples (). While I appropriate the destination of the CPTC (Sustainable and Equilibrium Chanda and CPTC (Sustainable and CPTC (Sust
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
raphael	c.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media creators"
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rashad	a.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. In the draft I, would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raveesh	N.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tim concept that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raven	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ravi	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ravikiran	C.	Ontario

			As a concepted operation Canada Law submitting my companies on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTA (Carbainship and Escalable Resolution).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding oscila media lusers and creators and their content from penulation".
			b. excluding social filed as best and clearors and user content from regulation; c. (Leb) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ray	R.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter alongorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c. Itel) "CRIC: a directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Pau	D	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rdy	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  "ckfcl" CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ray	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cyc pespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ray	w.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Ray	S.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ray	Α.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oxali media users and rearrors and their content from requisition".
			c. excluding social metal users and creators and their content from regulation ;     c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy indiction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ray	w.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CKIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I valual late cexpress my strong support or me intolowing guidance in the policy directions: a. "implemental discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C. [the] "CRU is directed not to impose equilatory requirements on online undertainegin enspect of consolar media creators"; d. and 'that the CRT's directed to "Crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  d. d. d. that the CRT's directed to "Crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ray	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC 6 directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			2. 1. There must be transparency among the public of how C-11 codes it's algorithms to promote content while censoring others. This may take the form of a watchdog community, a review board, or a committee responsible for hearing community concerns and having powers to take action to address these concerns to key-decision makers who will be the ones to repeal or modify some structures C-11 to incorporate more leniency.
			2.2. C-11 must also be unbiased in promoting political content from different parties, and there must be a justice system where members of the public can raise these concerns if there are incidents where one political party is unfairly promoted while it's opposition or adversaries are harder to find. Following this, there should also be a correction to any malpractice or abuse, and give many justice bodies power to modify C-11 to eliminate potential abuse. This can include investigations or scrutiny upon any foreign influence/interference among the messages, themes, culture, content, and ideology C-11 regulates and promoting
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ray	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Pav	D	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kay	ь.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raymond	A.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restroors and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Rill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Raymond	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raymond	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and unit the CNTL's an inexted on (C) respect adulence timice anni, where possine, increase une options available of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Raymonde	В.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			D. exclusing social meals users and creators and their content from regulation;  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Re	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			insue whee drop choice to teach.  It trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reanne	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "In CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rebecca		Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
resced		Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhancer these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rebecca	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rebecca	J.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  This is particularly important to me as a small, independent Canadian creator. Will my content be blocked or lowered in importance because I don't meet traditional broadcast standards or definitions? This legislation is meaningless if it doesn't benefit all Canadian creators, particularly if it disadvantages people like me doing innovative work in new forms of online media.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rebekah	C.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Reesa	В	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a second control for the first the Order Levine Nicolates in the COTE (Contribute of the Contribute of the Cont
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbox and their content form penulation".
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it extent norm regulator), requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reg	c.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requisted, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Regan	G.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience shoice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience shoice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience shoice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requisted, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Regina	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Regina	w.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulator y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reginald	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reginald	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Implementancy declarations pot ordinarios and read of the content from regulation", b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reid	S.	Ontario	swam for mil one my recorded mer confidentiation.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reidun	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" crespect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Remi	т.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Remi	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect undertice choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Remi	м.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Remi	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression. I am askino you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osicl media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cri exsect adulence rokice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ren	T.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerned person in changa, I am submitted properties on the Urder I stassing Directions to the U.K.L. (Sustainable and Equitable productsing Negulatory Pramework), while I appreciate the grart policy direction's errors to adoress the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, 1 volum like to express my strong support for the following gludatice in the planty directions: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in capacity of the control of the c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rena	Υ.	Ontario

			As a support of Court I are submitted as a support of the Court I are the Cour
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing social means are a rule results and rule in contact. Notificially requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not of "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rena	R.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Renato	G.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenato	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced in users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs id induced not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
D	6	Ontonio	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rene	G.	Ontario	It is the purpose and responsibility of the Government to look after and uphold the freedoms guaranteed in the Constitution and Bill of Rights as well as the UN charter and declaration of Human Rights.  There exists no franchise for the government to restrict the rights of free speech nor appoint any agency to administer it's unlawful legislation.
			Repealing the entire Bill would be appropriate, but since you are tasked with soliciting feedback on this I agree with the following>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] *CRTs id intexted not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rene	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rené	p.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
René	J.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ronc-	b	Ontaria

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Renee	0.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dono	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kello	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reta	Α.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rey	Α.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social means users and users and services in the services of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Reyja	T.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTL is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rezwan	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
D1			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rhoda	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to soliony and emarke these communities in the mail version.  1. First, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation."
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			be voluntary and opported to users her me, and any CNC-sected changes or now omme apportunits work should be the unione wincener or make use of union.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be requisited, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rhonda	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the]. CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to 'f'(or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rhylee	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverbility provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. exclusing social metal users and creators and meir content from regulation ;     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			5.11 This Digital Services of the Services of
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rhys	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c_the) CNTC is directed into to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d, and that the CRTC is directed to "(of respect auditione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Jurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ri	D.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstyr, a would like to express my strong support on the following guidance in one pointy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ri	D.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rian	В.	Yukon	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ricardo	В.	Ontario

			V.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing souls means uses and use that control and their control and the c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rich	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discovariability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalition".
			b. exclusing social metals uses and used on an user content non regulation from regulation (c. (t.le) "CRC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	F.	Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	Α.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	G.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Richard	м.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		u Scoud	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTLs di directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			. Lasty, Turge the inclusion to a breath of the control of a size and an equal realment for an Canadian Unime Creators. Any milatical or promotion opportunities created by bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they choose to create any bin C-11 s implementation must be equally available to an Canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they canadian Unime Creators, no matter where they can be expected by the control of the C-11 s implementation in the C-11 s implementa
Richard	В.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTL is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTL is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	к.	Quebec

			As a concepted person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Development Personal Mulis I recognise the death
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helic content from repulation".</li> </ol>
			Declaration of the Control of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
richard	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, in crease the options available"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, in crease the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	к.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the? "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy lespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concent that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wy that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the   "XRIC' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Richard		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding Social menior bases and useful control in the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a "implementing of the provisions of the provis
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implemental goldowerability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. "d. "expression of the content from regulation; d. "expression of the content of the content from regulation; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect, adultingence choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a "implementing of the provisions of the provis
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (Lehe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	D.	n

			As a concentral corresponding to the Color I am cultural transfer on the Color I review Directions to the CPDT (Suchainskie and Freinhalds Resolution Freinhalds Resolution Freinhalds Resolution Freinhalds Resolution Fre
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	0.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	D.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	d.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks ossed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			The imministration of the imministratio
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	A.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
richard	c	Columbia

			As a constant of Courts I am admitted an accompany to the Courts I am admitted by the Court Court Court Court Court Courts I am admitted by the Court Co
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exulution sorial media users and preators and help content from regulation"
			to. Exclusing social metal users and treatest and user content from Egulation ;  (c) the j "CRTs districted not to impose regulation; requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "CyC respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Richard	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	Ρ.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and helfer content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguing the services of the ser
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) crepacte underince choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	м.	British Columbia

			·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] *CRTs directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	Z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			bosed to online directory. I manage in a making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. This type industries or expressing source and support for the following globalises in the point, where the following size is a following the submittee in the point, where the following is a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada but also needlessly risks infringement into totalitarian censorship, a step against our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, yet also not infringe upon already established rights and freedoms, so we don't lose access to these services, or become a socialist surveillance state, lacking our lawfully established freedom of expression and narrowed into ignorance by government hands.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter whereor what, they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Dose to Grime Expression, I am aboutly you to sominy and eminate uses communications in the mind version.  I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the gloricy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Implementing described only provision in a rely clus in minimize size need to described in the described on the content from interesting to the described on the content from regulation.  c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed "O' (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Richard	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Dieb		0-4	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	Р.	Ontario	As a very concerned citizen of Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. de "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	I.	Manitoha

			Rome was not built in a day, nor did it fall in a day either.
			During the building stage, most likely Rome went through long periods where on the whole otherwise meaningless day to day actions by most individuals, even behind closed doors, tended to pull in roughly the same direction. Both ordinary people and elites trusted in each others daily actions  During destruction stage, it is safe to say ordinary people overall distrusted their ruling class and tended to focus on actions that favored their own security over the nation's strength. Likewise, the ruling class distrusted the ordinary people and also tended to focus on actions that favored their security at the cost of the nations.  I say that to ask this. Given the nature of the mandate(s) given to you by the ruling class, would you say you are on the building side or destruction side or a great nation. If you wrote a letter to your great great great grandson or granddaughter, how would you describe your day-to-day actions you have taken and are about to take in terms of laying the foundation of the reality they will be fully immersed in?  Sincerely hope you would write a letter that when read many moons on from turbulent present by that special someone we can only dream about, that they will gaze upon it as a priceless treasure from the now quiet past with a cheery bright face and Obviously, you and I know I have no powers in this matter whatsoever. But if I did as you do, I would give you the freedom to express yourself freely and wholeheartedly so that letter has much of your essence as possible, to give it the connecting power with that face you are helping to shape today. Will you allow me the same freedom to write my letter?
Richard	Α.	Alberta	Kindly Richard A As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
richard	h.	British Columbia	I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, but I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To strengthen these commitments to individual choice, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary, and CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to use them.
			3. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4.1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, wherever they choose to create.
Richard	В.	British Columbia	Thank you.
racinal a	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provision in a way what minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richard	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Diet		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Richele	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			De Voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKIC-circled changes to now online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use or mem.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiousously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	3.	Ontario

			As a responsed parent in Canada, Lam submitting my comments on the Order Jesuing Directions to the CRT (Sustainable and Sustainable and Sustai
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding Social medical bases and sections and reliable intervals and reliable interval
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my commonte on the Order I region Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable and Equilable Development on Directions to the CPT (Sustainable Development on Directions to the
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "I would be a support to the support of the su
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Rick	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	M.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rick	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rick	V.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
RICK	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Rick	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rickie	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
NICKIE	i.	Albei (d	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			ac volumery and opcome to date interior, and any CATC-duracted changes to now online agrounds which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Riesah	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. It is sty; I would use to experies any suring support to the indivining guidantee in the pure, but exact.  3. Implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Rigas	V.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
.ugus		Larrer

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution, sorial media users, and reveators and their content from regulation".
			c; they 'CRTC' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on coline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d, and that the KRTC is directed vic (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
