   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the number of operators of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “ensuring social media users and creators and their content are not filtered or blocked without explicit consent”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the risk to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "(i) the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jean A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "ending social media wars and creating their central focus regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean B. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "ending social media wars and creating their central focus regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "ending social media wars and creating their central focus regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "ending social media wars and creating their central focus regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "ending social media wars and creating their central focus regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "ending social media wars and creating their central focus regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-François A. Québec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-François A. Québec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-Guy L. Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-Marc D. Québec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-Marc T. New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-Philippe M. Québec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-Pierre L. Québec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jean-Pierre J. Saskatchewan
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider whether to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   e. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider whether to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sébastien F. Quebec
Jean-Jeannette M. Manitoba

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reassert and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reassert my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reassert and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reassert my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reassert and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reassert my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reassert and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reassert my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to reassert and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reassert my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeff A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeff T. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeff L. W. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeffrey F. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeffrey L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeffrey L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeffrey N. Quebec
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding online services that do not monetize online expression and/or content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding online services that do not monetize online expression and/or content from regulation".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to use me of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
2. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
3. Increasing social media views and creators and their content from regulation;
4. Including social media views and creators and their content from regulation;
5. That the CRTC is directed to (a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
6. That the CRTC is directed to (a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
7. That the CRTC is directed to (a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
8. That the CRTC is directed to (a) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions is a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Respecting social media users and creators and their content is necessary”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “analgorithm that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Respecting social media users and creators and their content is necessary”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jennifer A. New Brunswick
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safe guard cross-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jennifer M. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safe guard cross-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jennifer C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safe guard cross-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jennifer V. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safe guard cross-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jennifer B. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safe guard cross-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jennifer A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safe guard cross-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to specify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Opening social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jenny A. Ontario

-----

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to specify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Opening social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jerry A. Ontario

-----

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to specify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Opening social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeremiah H. Prince Edward Island

-----

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to specify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Opening social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeremy B. Prince Edward Island

-----

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to specify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Opening social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeremy A. Ontario

-----

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to specify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Opening social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   - “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeremy L.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeremy Y.
Novo Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeremy M.
Novo Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeremy A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jared S.
British Columbic

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jeranie S.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “limiting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “limiting discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jerry and Cody, Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction includes a provision to ensure that online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to express my support and endorse these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to express my support and endorse these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to express my support and endorse these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to express my support and endorse these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to express my support and endorse these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica B. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to express my support and endorse these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica Y. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to express my support and endorse these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica R. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).

I would like to open with some personal feelings regarding the current political climate. With the passing of Bill C-18, I feel my very own freedom of the press and ability to access news freely and as my terms is being threatened. As a free nation, safeguarding the possibilities of the open Internet.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jessica A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to desist and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. The policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated. I do not support legislation or policy that does not clearly and unambiguously outline the scope of online undertakings.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jett P. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to desist and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures assessed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to have online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jewel A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to desist and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures assessed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to have online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jay A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to desist and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures assessed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to have online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jill M. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] protect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jim P. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] protect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

J. A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] protect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

J. S. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] protect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

J. C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] protect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

J. M. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] protect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

J. A. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

[OpenMedia logo]
OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, not matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, not matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, not matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, not matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting social media users and creators and their inherent rights”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting social media users and creators and their inherent rights”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jo-Anne K. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting social media users and creators and their inherent rights”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John G. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting social media users and creators and their inherent rights”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John G. Ontario

I write with “yolks” of all other Canadians who simply do not want Bill C-11 to be passed at any time or for any fake claims of why it should be passed.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respecting social media users and creators and their inherent rights”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "respecting audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "respecting audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Joan M.
British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you tosolidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onceptualize audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Joanne A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onceptualize audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jocelyn L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onceptualize audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jocelyn D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onceptualize audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jocelyn L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onceptualize audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Joanne C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onceptualize audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Joanne D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onceptualize audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   "requiring online undertakings to maintain reasonable and transparent algorithms and complexity of algorithms in respect of programs of social media creators";
   "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jocelyn H.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   "requiring online undertakings to maintain reasonable and transparent algorithms and complexity of algorithms in respect of programs of social media creators";
   "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Joe G.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   "requiring online undertakings to maintain reasonable and transparent algorithms and complexity of algorithms in respect of programs of social media creators";
   "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jodi D.
New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   "requiring online undertakings to maintain reasonable and transparent algorithms and complexity of algorithms in respect of programs of social media creators";
   "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jodi R. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   "requiring online undertakings to maintain reasonable and transparent algorithms and complexity of algorithms in respect of programs of social media creators";
   "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jody A.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   "requiring online undertakings to maintain reasonable and transparent algorithms and complexity of algorithms in respect of programs of social media creators";
   "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jody P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "including social media and creators and their content from regulation";
   "requiring online undertakings to maintain reasonable and transparent algorithms and complexity of algorithms in respect of programs of social media creators";
   "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "writing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC defines the scope of the policy direction rules and regulations. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John A. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John B. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John C. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John D. Quebec
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to explain and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “increasing social media views and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John A.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to build upon and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made in a way that allows me to choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altered algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Assuming social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John F. Manitoba

John M. Alberta

John T. Alberta

John V. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John A. Manitoba

John A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John B. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John D. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John E. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John F. British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John H.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John R.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and substantially enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media views and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and substantially enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media views and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John H. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic direction entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John A.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic direction entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John B.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic direction entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John C.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic direction entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John D.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic direction entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John E.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic direction entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

John F.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic direction entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am urging that the final version of the policy direction not across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online undertakings, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should have the option to be turned off.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and harmonize these commitments in this version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “requiring that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Jonathan A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ")(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes to online algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ")(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes to online algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ")(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes to online algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ")(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic changes to online algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing algorithmic transparency and accountability mechanisms so that users can see how online algorithms work and make informed choices about them,"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "requiring online undertakings to make it possible for users to opt out or make informed decisions regarding online algorithms,"
   - "that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - "be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Joseph A.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing algorithmic transparency and accountability mechanisms so that users can see how online algorithms work and make informed choices about them,"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "requiring online undertakings to make it possible for users to opt out or make informed decisions regarding online algorithms,"
   - "that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - "be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Joseph B.
Ontario

Bill C-11 is completely unsavory! This bill needs to be scrapped! Immediately! Waste of tax payers money!!

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing algorithmic transparency and accountability mechanisms so that users can see how online algorithms work and make informed choices about them,"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "requiring online undertakings to make it possible for users to opt out or make informed decisions regarding online algorithms,"
   - "that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - "be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing algorithmic transparency and accountability mechanisms so that users can see how online algorithms work and make informed choices about them,"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"
   - "requiring online undertakings to make it possible for users to opt out or make informed decisions regarding online algorithms,"
   - "that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
   - "be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities acquired by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities acquired by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-scaffold and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in its current form the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. To ensure that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to similarly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content in regulation;"
   c. "and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to similarly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content in regulation;"
   c. "and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to similarly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content in regulation;"
   c. "and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to similarly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content in regulation;"
   c. "and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to similarly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content in regulation;"
   c. "and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Joyce N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Joyce H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Juan K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Juan R. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Judith G. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respect the audience's choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Judith H. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respect the audience's choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Judith S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respect the audience's choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Judith B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respect the audience's choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Judith P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respect the audience's choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Judith S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respect the audience's choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Judith S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respect the audience's choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Hello, I watched much of the debate on the Bill in the Senate and many of the parties were very concerned with this Bill as was I. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule-out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Julia H.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule-out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Juliana A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Julie M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Teen A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "Respecting audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-direct ed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Thank you very much for taking my feedback into consideration.

Justin A. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Thank you very much for taking my feedback into consideration.

Justin C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Thank you very much for taking my feedback into consideration.

Justin D. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Thank you very much for taking my feedback into consideration.

Justin F. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Thank you very much for taking my feedback into consideration.

Justin G. Ontario
Justin H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction save all social media content from algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Justin H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction save all social media content from algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Justin K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction save all social media content from algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Justine K. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction save all social media content from algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Julie A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction save all social media content from algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

K K. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction save all social media content from algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in respect of proportions of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators are subject to no mandatory requirement to alter their algorithms.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "avoiding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen W. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
Karen A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen J. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, I am asking you to re-consider and enhance these commitments to the fullest:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Ensuring social media views and creations and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not call for across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-consider and enhance these commitments to the fullest:

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not call for across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-consider and enhance these commitments to the fullest:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Ensuring social media views and creations and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not call for across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen L. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-consider and enhance these commitments to the fullest:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Ensuring social media views and creations and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not call for across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen U. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-consider and enhance these commitments to the fullest:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Ensuring social media views and creations and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not call for across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen A. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-consider and enhance these commitments to the fullest:

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Ensuring social media views and creations and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not call for across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karen S. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karine A.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karl D.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karl R. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karl D.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “safeguarding social media users and creators from harm or adverse impact associated with online undertakings”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(b) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Karla P. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kate A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kate F.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Katherine B.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kateri P.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathleen M.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Katherine P.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathleen M.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reinforce my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I believe that, no matter what is included in the policy direction, the government must treat the internet, social media, and other parts of digital communications, as a utility available to everyone. It must not be treated as the property controlled by business interests rather than public citizens.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Katherine B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reinforce my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathleen K.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reinforce my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathleen J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reinforce my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathia T. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reinforce my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathia T. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reinforce my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “avoiding social media sans and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathleen W. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “avoiding social media sans and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathryn W. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “avoiding social media sans and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathryn L. British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “avoiding social media sans and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathy P. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “avoiding social media sans and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be subject to my choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathy M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be subject to my choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kathy V.

OPENMEDIA is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”

b. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”

c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Katrina G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes interference to broadcasting undertakings”

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kazimer C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes interference to broadcasting undertakings”

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am worried you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions is a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Increasing social media users and creators’ choice and free of any mandatory requirements”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction will not address the alignment of social media ventures. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to social media users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keith V.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am worried you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions is a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Increasing social media users and creators’ choice and free of any mandatory requirements”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction will not address the alignment of social media ventures. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to social media users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keith H.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am worried you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions is a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Increasing social media users and creators’ choice and free of any mandatory requirements”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction will not address the alignment of social media ventures. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to social media users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keith D.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuance Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft proposals to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keith M.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

No society can surely be flourishing and happy, of which the far greater part of the members are poor and miserable.” – Adam Smith

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keith M.
Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Keith M.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Keith M.
Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Keith M.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”; and
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kelly H.
British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kelley A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ken F. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kes W. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Km M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Km L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Km A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Km L. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media views and creators and their content from regulation;" and
   - "that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media views and creators and their content from regulation;" and
   - "that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards
the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenny

C.

Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kenny

C.

Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kent

S.

Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keren

C.

Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keren

F.

British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Keri

F.

British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kerri

M.

Ontario

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640


1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kerry G.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin S. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin M.
Saskatchewan
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Kevin C.
British Columbia

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin H. Ontario

Note: The content above is a natural representation of the text in the image.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”. I strongly believe that this measure is essential to protect online expression and prevent the undue influence of powerful companies.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction makes clear that algorithms of broadcasting undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I fully support the government’s long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not have the best interests of the Canadian people at heart.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”. I strongly believe that this measure is essential to protect online expression and prevent the undue influence of powerful companies.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction makes clear that algorithms of broadcasting undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I fully support the government’s long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not have the best interests of the Canadian people at heart.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin A. Ontario

This email is a comment on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”. I strongly believe that this measure is essential to protect online expression and prevent the undue influence of powerful companies.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction makes clear that algorithms of broadcasting undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I fully support the government’s long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not have the best interests of the Canadian people at heart.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin A. Saskatchewan

This email is a comment on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”. I strongly believe that this measure is essential to protect online expression and prevent the undue influence of powerful companies.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction makes clear that algorithms of broadcasting undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I fully support the government’s long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not have the best interests of the Canadian people at heart.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”. I strongly believe that this measure is essential to protect online expression and prevent the undue influence of powerful companies.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction makes clear that algorithms of broadcasting undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I fully support the government’s long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not have the best interests of the Canadian people at heart.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin N. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”. I strongly believe that this measure is essential to protect online expression and prevent the undue influence of powerful companies.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction makes clear that algorithms of broadcasting undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I fully support the government’s long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not have the best interests of the Canadian people at heart.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin R. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”. I strongly believe that this measure is essential to protect online expression and prevent the undue influence of powerful companies.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction makes clear that algorithms of broadcasting undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I fully support the government’s long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not have the best interests of the Canadian people at heart.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kevin T. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (b) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kim A.
British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to rapidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize the following support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   e. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   f. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   g. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   h. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   i. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   j. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   k. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   l. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   m. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   n. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   o. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   p. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   q. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   r. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   s. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   t. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   u. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   v. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   w. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   x. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   y. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   z. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in crucir is that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kori A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in crucir is that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Krista N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in crucir is that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Krista D. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kristen M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kristen A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kristen D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kristen C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators, that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kristyn H. Ontario
Kyle E. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators, that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kyle A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators, that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kurt D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators, that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kurt C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators, that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kyle G. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “requiring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators, that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kyle A. Nova Scotia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   * “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   * “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   * “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   * that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kyle G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   * “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   * “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   * “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   * that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kyle K. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterate the CRTC's discretion to address the potential risks of online expression. However, I kindly request that you solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. Therefore, it is essential that the final direction clearly and unambiguously defines the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11 should be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Kyle M.
British Columbia

Kyle D. Ontario

Kyle L. Nova Scotia

Kyle H.
British Columbia

Kyle G.
Ontario

Kyle B.
Ontario

Kyrillos
Quebec

L.
Ontario

L.
Saskatchewan

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users when the user chooses to view them, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let the user choose whether to view any of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users when the user chooses to view them, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let the user choose whether to view any of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users when the user chooses to view them, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let the user choose whether to view any of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users when the user chooses to view them, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let the user choose whether to view any of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users when the user chooses to view them, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let the user choose whether to view any of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   c. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the draft version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Laina S. Lambert
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   c. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lance A. Lambert
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   c. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Laurie A. Lambert
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   c. “implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic detention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry A. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directionrules out across-the-board algorithmic detention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry L. New Mexico

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directionrules out across-the-board algorithmic detention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directionrules out across-the-board algorithmic detention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry O. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry O. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry O. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry L. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

Larry L. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   - The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   - I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
   - I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   - The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   - I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
   - I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   - The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   - I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
   - I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   - The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   - I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
   - I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   - The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   - I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
   - I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
   e. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to "implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   g. and that the CRTC is directed to "implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   h. and that the CRTC is directed to "implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   i. and that the CRTC is directed to "implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   j. and that the CRTC is directed to "implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Laura T. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Laura W.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lauren A. Online

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lauren B. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lauren C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lauren D. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services need to be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11 should be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Larry A.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “ensuring social media pages and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am urging the following actions:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions so as to minimize the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Laurie F. Lawrence L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “ensuring social media pages and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Laurie M. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing provisions that minimize the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lawrence A.
Saskatchewan
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]ontinue to implement voluntary provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to submit and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "reducing social media costs and creating and then canceled out of regulation";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in the first version of the policy direction runs across-the-board algorithms against expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lenor L. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lenor M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lenor F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lenn M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lenn H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lelow K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lelow G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "seeking social media users and creators and their content first regulation";
   - "where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill-C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respecting social media ears and creators and their content";
   - "excluding regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board alteration of algorithms. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   - The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   1. In response to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. "regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media content";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Lilly F.
Toronto, Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. "regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media content";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Linda H.
Newfoundland and Labrador

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. "regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media content";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lucas A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. "regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media content";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Linda F.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. "regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media content";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lilly F.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. "regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media content";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I recommend that the policy direction clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Linda L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I recommend that the policy direction clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Linda L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I recommend that the policy direction clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Linda L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I recommend that the policy direction clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Linda L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I recommend that the policy direction clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Linda L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I recommend that the policy direction clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Linda L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction runs out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lisa A. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lisa F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lisa L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lisa G.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (g) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to (g) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   g. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   h. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   i. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   j. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   k. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   l. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   m. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   n. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   o. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   p. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   q. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   r. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   s. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   t. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   u. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   v. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   w. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   x. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   y. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   z. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

2. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lisa E. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
2. "Regulating social media services and creators and their content in a way that does not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of socialmedia creators;"
3. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the market where they choose to create."

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lorelei C.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Regulating social media services and creators and their content in a way that does not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the market where they choose to create."

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Loretta C. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lori C. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Regulating social media services and creators and their content in a way that does not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction raise the bar across-the-board algorithmic attention evenly. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to new online algorithms work should let me choose whether to use them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

My heart is broken for Canada.

Canada is a nation of people who are proud to be Canadians. We naturally seek out Canadian news and support our fellow Canadians generously. Legislatures such as this show the government’s complete lack of faith in its citizens. This legislation is a communist regime. It shows that there is fragility in the government’s belief that the people have its back.

Legislation such as this poses to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction raise the bar across-the-board algorithmic attention evenly. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to new online algorithms work should let me choose whether to use them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lorna A.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lorna A.
British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for online undertakings.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lorraine A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for online undertakings.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lorraine H. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lorraine L. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for online undertakings.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lorraine S. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for online undertakings.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Loriy A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for online undertakings.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Loriy H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available for online undertakings.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Loriy L. Alberta

I will not be duped into agreeing with Bill C-11’s slighted by providing suggestions for improvement. I question the legitimacy of its enactment. Or simply, its legality.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to conduct studies to identify the programming available on social media platforms”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to voluntary to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to conduct studies to identify the programming available on social media platforms”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to voluntary to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to conduct studies to identify the programming available on social media platforms”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to voluntary to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to conduct studies to identify the programming available on social media platforms”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to voluntary to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to satisfy and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to conduct studies to identify the programming available on social media platforms”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to voluntary to use like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "preserving social media users' and creators' content and their control over it;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the promotion of programmes of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Louise A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "preserving social media users' and creators' content and their control over it;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the promotion of programmes of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Louise B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "preserving social media users' and creators' content and their control over it;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the promotion of programmes of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Louise C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "preserving social media users' and creators' content and their control over it;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the promotion of programmes of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Louise D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "preserving social media users' and creators' content and their control over it;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the promotion of programmes of social media creators;" and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luba A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luca M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lucia A. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luciano P. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I urge you to reconsider the need for statutory obligations that regulate content (and respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available).

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I urge the CRTC to direct the Commission to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lucie M. Quebec

Lucien L. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640
Luisa T. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidelines in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luke D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidelines in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luke P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidelines in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luke L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidelines in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luke G. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidelines in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luke N. New Brunswick

As a Canadian Content creator I implore you to take these steps to help me retain my livelihood.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I am a concerned individual from Canada, and I wanted to provide my input on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clearly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safely out across-the-board algorithmic alteration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust that you will take my feedback into serious consideration.

Luna B. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clearly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safely out across-the-board algorithmic alteration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust that you will take my feedback into consideration.

Luna C. British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clearly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safely out across-the-board algorithmic alteration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust that you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lutz D. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clearly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safely out across-the-board algorithmic alteration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust that you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lyn E. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clearly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safely out across-the-board algorithmic alteration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust that you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lyle P. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clearly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction safely out across-the-board algorithmic alteration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust that you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Lynda A. Quebec

As a very concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. We are adults, we can make our own decisions.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Thank you,
Lynne J.
British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on under-takings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Madison A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on under-takings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Magda P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on under-takings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maggie A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on under-takings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maggie L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on under-takings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maggie T. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on under-takings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Manu L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on under-takings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms altogether. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on the scope and scope of online undertakings. It must define matters where they choose to create.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Introducing social media categories and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Introducing social media categories and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marc A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marc B. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marc C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marc D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marc-Etienne A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marc-Olivier T. Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the CRTC] is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made with my choice to take them or not.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marcel M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the CRTC] is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made with my choice to take them or not.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marcia L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the CRTC] is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made with my choice to take them or not.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marcia L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the CRTC] is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made with my choice to take them or not.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marcia L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the CRTC] is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made with my choice to take them or not.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
   e. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user-like, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user-like, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user-like, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Margaret A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Margaret E. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Margaret F. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Margaret G. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on Bill C-11 Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - ensuring social media services and creators and their content are not imposed on users;
   - excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge you to ensure that the final version of the policy direction includes an explicit provision that all decisions to alter online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Margo M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maria S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marie A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marie M. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Margaret W. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marquette L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maria S. Quebec
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; and
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction state that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maria T. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; and
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction state that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maria C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings; and
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction state that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maria M. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640

Maria O. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “encouraging social media users and creators to explore and create content”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “limiting the extent to which a broadcasting undertaking may alter the social media algorithms of another broadcasting undertaking”; and
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and more, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “limiting the extent to which a broadcasting undertaking may alter the social media algorithms of another broadcasting undertaking”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “encouraging social media users and creators to explore and create content”;
   - “limiting the extent to which a broadcasting undertaking may alter the social media algorithms of another broadcasting undertaking”; and
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and more, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “limiting the extent to which a broadcasting undertaking may alter the social media algorithms of another broadcasting undertaking”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “encouraging social media users and creators to explore and create content”;
   - “limiting the extent to which a broadcasting undertaking may alter the social media algorithms of another broadcasting undertaking”; and
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and more, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “limiting the extent to which a broadcasting undertaking may alter the social media algorithms of another broadcasting undertaking”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “encouraging social media users and creators to explore and create content”;
   - “limiting the extent to which a broadcasting undertaking may alter the social media algorithms of another broadcasting undertaking”; and
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and more, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marie C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further enhance and support these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further enhance and support these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further enhance and support these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

  a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

  b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

  c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

  d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available);

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures imposed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments to the fullest.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

  a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

  b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

  c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

  d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available);

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures imposed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onstruct all decisions, rules, and orders to allow for, encourage, and increase the options available for all social media users and creators to share their content and express themselves online”;
   e. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onstruct all decisions, rules, and orders to allow for, encourage, and increase the options available for all social media users and creators to share their content and express themselves online”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to study and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am urging you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "Regulating social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "Including audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users and, any CRTC directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mark L. Marlene B. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   b. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction places an unacceptably low bar on the CRTC’s ability to impose requirements on online undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of the platforms where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marlene A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   b. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”.
   c. The CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction places an unacceptably low bar on the CRTC’s ability to impose requirements on online undertakings. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of the platforms where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marlyn T. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. That the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to further and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-think and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be the user’s choice whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Martin M.
British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mary D. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to robustly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes harm to other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation);
   c.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

MaryAnne C. Ontario
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew W. Ontario

I do not support at all Bill C-11.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online undertakings work should let the choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew L. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew N. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew A. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew V. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew D. Ontario

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online undertakings work should let the choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online undertakings work should let the choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online undertakings work should let the choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider these comments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider these comments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew S. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]laim audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]laim audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew G. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]laim audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew W. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]laim audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew G. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]laim audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]laim audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew G. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “exclusively promoting discoverability provisions in respect of Canadian creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]oncern audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew
British Columbia
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew C. Ontario

I have opted to leave the draft intact because I agree with every bit of that and frankly cannot articulate the logic as eloquently. As per how I want to use the internet, I give you the following to mull over:

We, as concerned Canadians, are voicing our concerns about the implementation of Bill C-11. We are against any regulations that would harm online creators and the online expression of Canadian citizens.

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew C. Ontario

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew C. Ontario

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew C. Ontario

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew C. Ontario

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew C. Ontario

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Matthew C. Ontario

I am a whole ass adult who is fully capable of deciding what content to watch and if you start peddling “Canadian content” as per your ambiguous definition, I am not going to watch it. If a movie or a show is good, people will watch it regardless of where its from. If you tell people to watch it just because it was Canadian, make us all give a shit and people will just find other reasons to pass such a stupid decision to get back to having a variety of content suited their interests, myself included and unpatriotically so.

If I were a youth in school, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maureen A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maurice S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maureen W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maureen W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maureen W. British Columbia

As a concerned Canadian I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Maureen W. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mauro Luc. New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mauro Luc. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mauro V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - defining algorithmic transparency requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mauro V. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media views and creators and their content first regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not act across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to work like or, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Dear Sir/Madam,

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “increasing social media views and creators and their content first regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not act across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to work like or, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mayu N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Meagan C. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-evaluate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Melissa P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-evaluate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Melissa M. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "ensuring social media users and creators and their content are not subject to algorithmic discrimination or disadvantage;"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “The CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be me-made whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the final direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. I further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in that I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so as not to tresspass to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michael A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michael D. Manitoba

I believe social media users and those who produce content should not be hamstringing in their efforts, and hope the CRTC is also eschewed from imposing regulatory requirements on same. Creators need protections from CRTC efforts to disrupt audience abundance and online platform actions. Promotion of Canadian content should be voluntary, and any CRTC changes should respect that principle.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michael A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michael J. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michael E. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michael H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [i] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michel L.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [i] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michel N.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [i] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michel D.
Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [i] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michel M.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [i] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michel P.
New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [i] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michel Q.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [i] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michele A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michele A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michele A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michelle S. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to highlight and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to explain and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to explain and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike Y. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to explain and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike R. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to explain and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to explain and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike Q. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to explain and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike Q. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike M. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike N. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mike O. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am urging you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Miranda W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Miranda J.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Miranda W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Miranda J.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the chosen whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mitchell H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the chosen whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mitchell M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the chosen whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mitchell F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the chosen whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mishelle M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the chosen whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mitchell C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the chosen whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rob K. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Michael A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mohamed A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mohamed Z. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Marie A. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”,
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

MORGAN M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”,
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

MORGAN F. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”,
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Morgan W.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Mudar A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

   2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

   3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

   4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Myles H.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Myles H.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadia A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadia A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadia A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadia A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadia A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out the imposition of requirements on online undertakings that create a “narrower range of expression”.
3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadia A.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says not across-the-board algorithms adjustment entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadine A
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says not across-the-board algorithms adjustment entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadine B
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says not across-the-board algorithms adjustment entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nadine C
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says not across-the-board algorithms adjustment entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Najma M
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says not across-the-board algorithms adjustment entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nancy A
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says not across-the-board algorithms adjustment entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nancy B
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction says not across-the-board algorithms adjustment entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Increasing social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   c. “Reserving social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators:
   a. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Increasing social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   c. “Reserving social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators:
   a. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Increasing social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   c. “Reserving social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators:
   a. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Increasing social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   c. “Reserving social media users and creators and their content first reputation”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators:
   a. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nancy A. Albertas

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Naomi T. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nancy S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Naomi H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Napolea D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nabuti H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Natalicia C. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. I am asking you to clarify that online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   e. “allowing audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in China, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   e. “allowing audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction state out across-the-board algorithms attention entropy. Any measure assessed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction state out across-the-board algorithms attention entropy. Any measure assessed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction state out across-the-board algorithms attention entropy. Any measure assessed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction state out across-the-board algorithms attention entropy. Any measure assessed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on what services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to make these commitments more robust in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to make these commitments more robust in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to make these commitments more robust in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to make these commitments more robust in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (ii) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting these comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicholas A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content thereof from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content thereof from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content thereof from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Validating, social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicki M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Validating, social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicki W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Validating, social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicki H. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Validating, social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicola D. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Validating, social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicola H. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Validating, social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicola D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Validating, social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   e. “proposed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize the strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge that the final version of the policy direction see the need to alter the algorithms of online undertakings. Any measures used at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Nicole M. Manitoba
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "respecting social media waves and creators (and how their content is treated for regulation)";
   - and that the CRTC is directed to: "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings can choose which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a) "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b) "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d) the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like myself, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

5. Lastly, I believe that altering the content being pushed out to Canadians is non-beneficial especially for the citizens of this country. If there was to be any alterations done, it should be optional.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a) "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b) "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d) the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like myself, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

5. Lastly, I believe that altering the content being pushed out to Canadians is non-beneficial especially for the citizens of this country. If there was to be any alterations done, it should be optional.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “algorithmic decision-making processes in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “algorithmic decision-making processes in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “algorithmic decision-making processes in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direct runs out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Norman E. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction runs out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Norman L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction runs out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Norman S. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction runs out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Norman P. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction runs out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Norman C. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   - That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction runs out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryk D. Laval

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards
the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should pose no danger to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

O Canada

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should pose no danger to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

O Kras P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should pose no danger to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

O British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should pose no danger to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

O Y. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should pose no danger to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; and
   b. That the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Oleksii V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; and
   b. That the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Olivia G. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators; and
   b. That the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content in the scope of regulation".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback seriously in consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. Secondly, I trust you will consider my feedback.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. Secondly, I trust you will consider my feedback.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. Secondly, I trust you will consider my feedback.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Pat A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Pat N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Pat N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

This must remain inviolate as a principle of democracy.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Pat A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Pat A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patricia A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patricia A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-examine and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the options available to audiences of broadcasting undertakings;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available to audiences of broadcasting undertakings".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patricia B.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Respecting user privacy provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “Respecting social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction does not include provisions for online undertakings in respect of social media creators:
   a. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   b. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “Respecting user privacy provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patrick C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patrick L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patrick W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patrick D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patrick M. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Patrick A. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned Canadian citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I urge you to recognize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings”;
   - “CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction values and supports user-generated content and the potential it offers to create and express ideas and opinions. The internet has provided us with a platform to share our thoughts and creativity freely, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should respect user choice.

3. In particular, I would urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11 should be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create. Any measures imposed on online undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11 shall be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create. Any measures imposed on online undertakings should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. Secondly, the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. Secondly, the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. Secondly, the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am working to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. Secondly, the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul M. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul B. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul C. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to reaffirm and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul M.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to reaffirm and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul C.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to reaffirm and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, in no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
Paul M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resolving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resolving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resolving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul A. Alberta

I am submitting these comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While the draft policy direction moves in the right direction to address the risks posed to online expression, I want to see these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resolving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resolving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul A. Prince Edward Island

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resolving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paul A. New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "resolving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their material from regulation”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paula F. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their material from regulation”; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Paulina A. Ontario
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “implementing discoverability provisions is a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
- “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
- “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
- “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need for new algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. and that the CRTC is directed to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Pedro N.
British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions' efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for online undertakings to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “Reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Peter H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for online undertakings to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “Reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Peter F. New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for online undertakings to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “Reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Peter C. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for online undertakings to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;”
   b. “Reducing social media users and creators and their content from regulation;”
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Peter D. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content in the policy direction;"
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to re-emphasize the following aspects of the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Peter A. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Implemented discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic restrictions entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Peter W. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to adjust and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “increasingly depersonalising provision in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic regulations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to operate.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Peter C. Manitoba

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators and, any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be let them choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators and, any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be let them choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators and, any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be let them choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators and, any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be let them choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy directions’ efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to: “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction save across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Philip B. Alberta

Philippe C. Quebec

Philippe L. Quebec

Philip-Olivier B. Quebec

Philip N. British

British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “(b) CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Philippe L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “(b) CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Philomena P. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   "Improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"

   and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. "Involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
3. "The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
4. "The CRTC is directed to (b) exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation."
5. "The CRTC is directed to (a) implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."

I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

1. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
2. "Involving social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
3. "The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
4. "The CRTC is directed to (b) exclude social media users and creators and their content from regulation."
5. "The CRTC is directed to (a) implement discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings."

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to further and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   c. Voluntary and optional for users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Prentis N. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Voluntary and optional for users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Quentin J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Voluntary and optional for users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

R. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Voluntary and optional for users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

R. P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Voluntary and optional for users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

R. A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   b. Voluntary and optional for users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

R. A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to bolster and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c]onsider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am calling on you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction eschews across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rachel L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am calling on you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “achieving discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction eschews across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rachel B. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am calling on you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction eschews across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rachel C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am calling on you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “achieving discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction eschews across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rachel B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am calling on you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction eschews across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Radoslaw S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am calling on you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “achieving discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction eschews across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Radouene B.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to voluntary choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;1

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

[Signature]

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;1

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

[Signature]
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Randy S. Ontario

Although this message was partially pre-composed as part of an OpenMedia request, I have modified it to reflect my thoughts.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Randy H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Randy N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Randall O.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Randy S.
Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Randy S. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Randy H. Alberta

The statements below are a suggested form letter from Open Media of which I sincerely agree with as they would lessen the negative impact from Bill C-11. Therefore I will leave them below as a "blank slate" solution or "Plan B" if you will.

However, your actual position is that Bills C-11, C-18 etc are straight up censorship policies. They must be repealed to protect our Charter 2B freedoms of speech and expression. This country is streamlining towards outright totalitarianism or a "broadband dictatorhips" as Trudeau so strongly claims. I am one in the broad of the fre and we are seeing that become.

Repeat these horrendous and very negative pieces of legislation.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Randy L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Randy R. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Randy S. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Randy S. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "c. [the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   - "d. and that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "c. [the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   - "d. and that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "c. [the] ‘CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators’;
   - "d. and that the CRTC is directed to ‘(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available’.";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation;"
   - that the CRTC is directed to require that broadcasting undertakings seek to understand the impact of their algorithms on social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ray A. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation;"
   - that the CRTC is directed to require that broadcasting undertakings seek to understand the impact of their algorithms on social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ray B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation;"
   - that the CRTC is directed to require that broadcasting undertakings seek to understand the impact of their algorithms on social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Raymond A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation;"
   - that the CRTC is directed to require that broadcasting undertakings seek to understand the impact of their algorithms on social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Raymond G. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation;"
   - that the CRTC is directed to require that broadcasting undertakings seek to understand the impact of their algorithms on social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rayandle B. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation;"
   - that the CRTC is directed to require that broadcasting undertakings seek to understand the impact of their algorithms on social media users and creators and their current need for algorithmic transparency and regulation.

2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rebecca B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rebecca L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rebecca K. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rebecca C. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rebecca A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Reidun S. Alberta

Rena Y. Ontario

Ren T. Nova Scotia

Remi P. Ontario

Remi M. Quebec

Remi T. Quebec

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

[Redacted]
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “respect audience choices and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   1. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   2. “including social media users and creators and their current content”; and
   3. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   1. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   2. “including social media users and creators and their current content”; and
   3. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard M. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   1. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   2. “including social media users and creators and their current content”; and
   3. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   1. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   2. “including social media users and creators and their current content”; and
   3. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard F. New Brunswick and Labrador

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   1. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   2. “including social media users and creators and their current content”; and
   3. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard F. New Brunswick

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   1. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   2. “including social media users and creators and their current content”; and
   3. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard F. Quebec
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “ensuring discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “ensuring discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “ensuring discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “ensuring discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “ensuring discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “ensuring discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “ensuring discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard D.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard W. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard Quebec
Richard A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Richard H.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sincerely,

Richard Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I strongly support the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sincerely,

Richard Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sincerely,

Richard Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sincerely,

Richard Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sincerely,

Richard Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rick W. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rickie R. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rick F. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rick S. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to balance and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OceanMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned citizen of Canada, I am stating my agreement to the statements on this form letter on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you tosolidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rob L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you tosolidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rob M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you tosolidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rob H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you tosolidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rob Z. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you tosolidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rob A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you tosolidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   d. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   e. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   f. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   g. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   h. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   i. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   j. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   k. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   l. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   m. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   n. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   o. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   p. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   q. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   r. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   s. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   t. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   u. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   v. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   w. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   x. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   y. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   z. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-sectoral algorithmic actions entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be clearly outlined to users and made voluntary.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert G. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content in regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction takes into account the following aspects:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content in regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, for instance:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content in regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert S. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Robert A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
Robert T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction uses all across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction uses all across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert A. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction uses all across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert A. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction uses all across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert T. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction uses all across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction uses all across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so that we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reaffirm my support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert C. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. c. the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to us, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Robert M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing uncompensated accessibility in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. Secondly, it is critical that the final version of the policy direction respect the majority’s choice and expression. In doing so, I urge the following measures:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

5. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

6. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. Secondly, it is critical that the final version of the policy direction respect the majority’s choice and expression. In doing so, I urge the following measures:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   b. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

4. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

5. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

6. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to substantially and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roger A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media views and readers from the requirements of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “not requiring regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roger L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media views and readers from the requirements of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “not requiring regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roger B. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media views and readers from the requirements of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “not requiring regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roger H. Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media views and readers from the requirements of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “not requiring regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roger G. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media views and readers from the requirements of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “not requiring regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am in the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “respecting social media users and creators content and their fair treatment”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roland L. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roland L. Manitoba

The government of Canada should not be censoring Canadians at all. Any government attempting to do so should be immediately removed. There should be no more, less manipulation of the rights and freedoms of Canadians. Any leaders in all positions of power should step down if they are not going to hold up our God given rights to be free.

We have a long road back ahead, no more going down that road of messing with our freedoms.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roland L. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roland L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “increasing social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alterations of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "Respecting social media users and creators and their freedom of expression";
- "Implementing algorithmic regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made either way to make use of.

I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Secondly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "Respecting social media users and creators and their freedom of expression";
- "Implementing algorithmic regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made either way to make use of.

I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Thirdly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "Respecting social media users and creators and their freedom of expression";
- "Implementing algorithmic regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made either way to make use of.

I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Fourthly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "Respecting social media users and creators and their freedom of expression";
- "Implementing algorithmic regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made either way to make use of.

I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Fifthly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "Respecting social media users and creators and their freedom of expression";
- "Implementing algorithmic regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- That the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made either way to make use of.

I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attenuation entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media views and creations and their creation from reputation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ronald L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media views and creations and their creation from reputation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rosa G. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media views and creations and their creation from reputation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ronny L. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media views and creations and their creation from reputation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rory M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media views and creations and their creation from reputation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rosa G. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media views and creations and their creation from reputation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction have an across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ronald L. British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rosemary M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rosita M. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Regulating algorithmic decisions in a way that maximizes the need for new and innovative algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Regulating social media uses and creation and their impact on regulation”;
   - “In the absence of specific requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “The CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction calls clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Regulating algorithmic decisions in a way that maximizes the need for new and innovative algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Regulating social media uses and creation and their impact on regulation”;
   - “In the absence of specific requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “The CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction calls clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Regulating algorithmic decisions in a way that maximizes the need for new and innovative algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Regulating social media uses and creation and their impact on regulation”;
   - “In the absence of specific requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “The CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction calls clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Regulating algorithmic decisions in a way that maximizes the need for new and innovative algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Regulating social media uses and creation and their impact on regulation”;
   - “In the absence of specific requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “The CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction calls clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Regulating algorithmic decisions in a way that maximizes the need for new and innovative algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Regulating social media uses and creation and their impact on regulation”;
   - “In the absence of specific requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “The CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction calls clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Regulating algorithmic decisions in a way that maximizes the need for new and innovative algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Regulating social media uses and creation and their impact on regulation”;
   - “In the absence of specific requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “The CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction calls clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "Including social media views and views and their content from regulation"
2. Secondly, I believe that the CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roxanne H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "Including social media views and views and their content from regulation"
2. Secondly, I believe that the CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Roy W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "Including social media views and views and their content from regulation"
2. Secondly, I believe that the CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ruben T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "Including social media views and views and their content from regulation"
2. Secondly, I believe that the CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ruben T. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   e. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   f. be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   g. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a directive to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Rudolf W. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   e. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   f. be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   g. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a directive to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Russ H. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
   e. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"
   f. be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
   g. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a directive to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be made only where there is clear evidence of harm.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ruth S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be made only where there is clear evidence of harm.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ruth L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be made only where there is clear evidence of harm.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ruth S. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should be made only where there is clear evidence of harm.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ruth Q.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ruth A.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ruth A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ryan L.
Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ryan A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Ryan A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
3. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to rephrase my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan A.
Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
2. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan T. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Ryan A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direct not out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

S. D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direct not out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

S. W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direct not out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

S. Sabastian K. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direct not out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

S. Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to simplify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direct not out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the OrderIssuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings".

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the broadcasting algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings".

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the broadcasting algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings".

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the broadcasting algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; and
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings".

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not alter the broadcasting algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sally A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sally H. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sally H. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sally A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sally A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to fine algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I recommend that the policy direction clearly specify on which services should be regulated, and roles driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samantha R. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel I. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel E. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel J. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Samuel A. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";

2. Secondly, I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to subtly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sandra H. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sandra L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sandra S. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sandra V. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sandra A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reemphasize the need for the following commitments in the policy direction:
   - Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;
   - Allowing social media users and creators and their content to be regulated;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
   - Allowing online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am urging you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sayed S. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am urging you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am urging you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am urging you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithmic alteration completely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah M.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithmic alteration completely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah W.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithmic alteration completely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah H.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithmic alteration completely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah A.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithmic alteration completely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah L.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithmic alteration completely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah A.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “adapting into action to protect algorithms from the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out cross-the-board algorithmic alteration completely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sarah W.
British Columbia

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creation from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Scott
Alberta
I, Scott Y. of Saskatchewan Canada, am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “regulating social media users and creators, and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to new online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Scott Y.
Saskatchewan

I, Seaghan H. of Ontario, am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “regulating social media users and creators, and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, in it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures served at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to new online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadians online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Seaghan H.
Ontario
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I’m concerned that the final version of the policy direction may reduce the need for algorithmic changes and where possible, increase the options available.
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."

Sean M.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I’m concerned that the final version of the policy direction may reduce the need for algorithmic changes and where possible, increase the options available.
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Involving social media users and creators and their email providers;"
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, and where possible, increase the options available."
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content”;
   - “respecting audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available”.
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “respecting audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not alter the broadcasting regulatory framework. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on whether services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sean A. Manitoba
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-establish and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “improving social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “Making regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I hope you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidarity and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To fully implement these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Serge A. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sergey Z. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shafeek M. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shaheen N. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction state that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shaham F.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to restate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction state that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shane B.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure clear and unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services. Many measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users such as me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Shane T.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure clear and unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services. Many measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Shane A.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure clear and unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services. Many measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Shannah C.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure clear and unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services. Many measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Shannah A.
Newfoundland

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure clear and unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services. Many measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Shannah L.
Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure clear and unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services. Many measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Shannah L.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”
   - “that the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure clear and unambiguous, so we don't lose access to these services. Many measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it's crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures imposed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; and
   d. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   e. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   f. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

Sharon A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; and
   d. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   e. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   f. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

Shane L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; and
   d. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   e. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   f. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

Shana K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; and
   d. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   e. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   f. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

Shawn P. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; and
   d. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   e. "increasing social media views and creation and their content from regulation";
   f. "[the] "CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction not alter the core principles of Bill C-11’s implementation.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and empirically evident that social media and sites like Google are many Canadians main news resources. Limiting our news resources limits our abilities to participate in the electoral process in an informed manner.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sheena L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sheela J. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sheela T. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sheila A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sh PANEL
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “improving discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media values and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the [CRTC] is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction ensures that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am deeply concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

5. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "the CRTC is directed to ensure that social media users and creators and their content are not subject to unfair disadvantage, and that the CRTC is directed to ensure that social media users and creators and their content are not subject to unfair disadvantage, and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am urging you to consider the following directions:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. "the CRTC is directed to ensure that social media users and creators and their content are not subject to unfair disadvantage, and that the CRTC is directed to ensure that social media users and creators and their content are not subject to unfair disadvantage, and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] "respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sherry A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sherry G. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sherry M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sherry A. British Columbia
Sherry C.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sherry L.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sheryl H.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sheryl T.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shahid L.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shirley L.
Saskatchewan

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shirley A.
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content in the regulation of how online undertakings in respect of proempts of social media creators";
   c. "The CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I am a concerned Canadian who is asking the federal government to strengthen the regulations related to Bill C-11, especially those pertaining to completely eliminating allowing access to root-algorithm alterations.

I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content in the regulation of how online undertakings in respect of proempts of social media creators";
   c. "The CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I am a concerned Canadian who is asking the federal government to strengthen the regulations related to Bill C-11, especially those pertaining to completely eliminating allowing access to root-algorithm alterations.

I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content in the regulation of how online undertakings in respect of proempts of social media creators";
   c. "The CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I am a concerned Canadian who is asking the federal government to strengthen the regulations related to Bill C-11, especially those pertaining to completely eliminating allowing access to root-algorithm alterations.

I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content in the regulation of how online undertakings in respect of proempts of social media creators";
   c. "The CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I am a concerned Canadian who is asking the federal government to strengthen the regulations related to Bill C-11, especially those pertaining to completely eliminating allowing access to root-algorithm alterations.

I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "Including social media users and creators and their content in the regulation of how online undertakings in respect of proempts of social media creators";
   c. "The CRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Simon G. Quebec

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Simon C. Alberta

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Simon M. Ontario

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Simon F. Quebec

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Simon L. Quebec

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Simon B. Quebec

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to redraft and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content are respected”;
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online undertakings work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned citizen, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I request you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;" and
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users and, any CRTC-directed changes to how algorithms work should be the choice whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Skyler L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Slate D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sofia D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sail K. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Selwinsa rose Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to reiterate my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. Furthermore, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to submit and enhance these comments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Soraya M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to submit and enhance these comments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Saray W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to submit and enhance these comments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Safia W. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to submit and enhance these comments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Safiya L. Alberta, Canada

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to submit and enhance these comments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Safia H. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to submit and enhance these comments in the final version.

1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Safia Y. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. It is crucial that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing de-identification provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stacey K. Quebec

Stacey W. Alberta

Stacey H. Alberta

Stacey E. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stanley A
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stanley B
Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shanna L
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shawn L
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   - "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;" and
   - "the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available in the direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

5. Lastly, if there is any room to ban and make illegal the accisa

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Reducing social media harms and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unequivocally, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.

For a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am inquiring that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephanie L. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am inquiring that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephanie G. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am inquiring that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephanie A. Quebec

Stephanie B. New Brunswick

Stephanie C. Alberta

Stephanie D. New Brunswick

Stephanie E. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the first version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephanie A. New Brunswick

Stephanie C. New Brunswick

Stephanie T. New Brunswick

Stephanie L. Ontario

Stephanie R. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephan K. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephan L. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephan M. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephan N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "avoiding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "avoiding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "avoiding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "avoiding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen D. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "avoiding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stephen E. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "avoiding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
   c. "[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let the user choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t have access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “Extending online undertakings’ discoverability provisions to programs of social media creators”
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings must be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Steve A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “Extending online undertakings’ discoverability provisions to programs of social media creators”
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings must be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Steve H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “Extending online undertakings’ discoverability provisions to programs of social media creators”
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings must be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Steve M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “Extending online undertakings’ discoverability provisions to programs of social media creators”
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings must be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Steve P. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “Extending online undertakings’ discoverability provisions to programs of social media creators”
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings must be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Steve V. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “Extending online undertakings’ discoverability provisions to programs of social media creators”
   c. “The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states that online undertakings must be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be voluntary and optional to users like me.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Steve A. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to consider and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction state that all algorithms are subject to an audience choice test, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made in a way that lets me choose whether to use them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
23 July 2023

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   e. that the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   f. that the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
   g. that the CRTC is directed to [ ] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am concerned that the final version of the policy direction fails to address the risks posed to online expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Steve P. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Authorizing social media users and creators and their content;"
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equitable treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Shawn C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Authorizing social media users and creators and their content;"
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equitable treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stuart D. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "Authorizing social media users and creators and their content;"
   c. "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (i) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equitable treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stuart R. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   e. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   f. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   g. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   h. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Stuart P.
Sue T.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available
   e. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sue M.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available
   e. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sukhmanpreet
Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available
   e. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Susan B. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "safeguard social media users and creators from harm and from harassment";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be user-controlled to make up for them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
- "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
- "The CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

5. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sue A.

Susan D.

Susan H. Manitoba

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “Including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction draw out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction draw out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction draw out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Sylvio R.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “implementing social media undertakings and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “implementing social media undertakings is respect of programs of social media creators”;
- “and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures imposed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction evidences action towards the above-mentioned directions. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tanya L. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “the CRTC is directed to respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules on across-the-board algorithmic determinations. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”.

2. Secondly, I urge the inclusion of a direction that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after-algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content in programming decisions that are contextually relevant to that service";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Teresa B. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to urge my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that recognizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction reiterates the across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online creators and, any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity as to which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “a direction to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Terry A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “a direction to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Terry S. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “a direction to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

With a final version of the policy direction as presented, it is crucial that the following commitments be solidified and enhanced to protect online expression:

a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;

d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction is free from the risks imposed on online expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction is free from the risks imposed on online expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction is free from the risks imposed on online expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction is free from the risks imposed on online expression. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to re-emphasize these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Therese A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to re-emphasize these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Thomas K. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to re-emphasize these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Thomas N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to re-emphasize these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Thomas N. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you to re-emphasize these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to re-emphasize my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Therese A. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-establish and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes flow to other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation"; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where feasible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction re-establish or across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to even like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Thomas A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-establish and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes flow to other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation"; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where feasible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction re-establish or across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to every like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Thomas C. Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to re-establish and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that maximizes flow to other algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "excluding social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation";
   - "including social media earns and creators and their content from regulation"; and
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where feasible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction re-establish or across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to every like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedbacks into consideration.

Tiffany V. Alberta
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "including social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tim M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. that the CRTC is directed to [x] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tim F. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tim C. Alberta
Columbia OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking that the final version of the policy direction “rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.” Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Timothy A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadband Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify, solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to ensure that, any CRTC-directed changes to few online algorithms work should let the creator choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, matter where they chose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, I am making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not accommodate the board of the arbitration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Todd A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not accommodate the board of the arbitration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tobias D. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not accommodate the board of the arbitration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tobias F. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not accommodate the board of the arbitration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tobias H. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not accommodate the board of the arbitration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tobias L. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not accommodate the board of the arbitration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Todd O. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am making you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   - "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction does not accommodate the board of the arbitration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Aurora R. Canadian

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directionVector out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Also, telling corporations to pay to provide news to the Canadian government is ridiculous. It is no wonder that those corporations have chosen to not provide news content, because of C-11.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to stabilize and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy directionVector out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Also, telling corporations to pay to provide news to the Canadian government is ridiculous. It is no wonder that those corporations have chosen to not provide news content, because of C-11.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm changes entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   b. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes risk to algorithmic broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altered algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tracy M. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altered algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tracy N. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altered algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tracy P. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for altered algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to free online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tracy F. Ontario

Quitting censoring the people you work for. Are you planning to do something bad to Canadians that you don’t want people to know about? Stop violating Canadians rights.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use them like, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be ine the choice of whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use them like, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be ine the choice of whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction values and respects the ability to create. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow the user to choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Trevor A. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to nullify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “Ensuring social media users and creators and their content from regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - “That the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction values and respects the ability to create. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to allow the user to choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Trevor A. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
Trevor P. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

I write these consultations not as a direct or cookie-cutter feedback, and while I urge you to pay heed to the contents of this feedback, I have concerns that aren’t directly addressed in the organized feedback efforts on this topic thus far. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I would again like to ask everyone involved the only question that truly matters: What are the fundamental values of the order you wish to build, and to bond to the future? Because this naming decision is one of the efforts that will be posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I know these consultations net a great deal of cookie-cutter feedback, and while I urge you to pay heed to the contents of this feedback, I have concerns that aren’t directly addressed in the organized feedback efforts on this topic thus far. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms and priority. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I would again like to ask everyone involved the only question that truly matters: What are the fundamental values of the order you wish to build, and to bond to the future? Because this naming decision is one of the efforts that will be posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I know these consultations net a great deal of cookie-cutter feedback, and while I urge you to pay heed to the contents of this feedback, I have concerns that aren’t directly addressed in the organized feedback efforts on this topic thus far. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms and priority. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

In conclusion, I would again like to ask everyone involved the only question that truly matters: What are the fundamental values of the order you wish to build, and to bond to the future? Because this naming decision is one of the efforts that will be posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I know these consultations net a great deal of cookie-cutter feedback, and while I urge you to pay heed to the contents of this feedback, I have concerns that aren’t directly addressed in the organized feedback efforts on this topic thus far. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms and priority. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to validate and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   b. “enforcing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”
   c. “including social media users and creators and their content in regulation”
   d. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”
   e. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”
   f. “CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Troy Y. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Twyla D. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tyler G.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”,
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. “the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Tyler V. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   d. "and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I am an adult. I do not need a bunch of choices trying to fix things that are not broken, screw the net, agenda 2030 and your nanoscore.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   c. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to [c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available;"
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to critically evaluate these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and content from regulation”;
   c. “(b)(ii) CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Yours sincerely,

Tyrone R. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.

OpenMedia Engagement Network // 1424 Commercial Dr - P.O. Box 21674, Vancouver, BC, Canada V5L 5G3 // 1-888-441-2640
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; and
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC ( Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   b. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vanessa W.
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to ratify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
- "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "keeping social media users and creators and their content from regulated";
- and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Varindrapal D.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to ratify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
- "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "keeping social media users and creators and their content from regulated";
- and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Velvet S.
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to ratify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
- "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "keeping social media users and creators and their content from regulated";
- and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

Verlie J.
Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to ratify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
- "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
- "keeping social media users and creators and their content from regulated";
- and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

---

---

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”; and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. I also trust that you will allow me to make my own decisions on what content I watch, read, listen to or copy. I do not need you to make that decision for me.

   As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

   As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

   As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

   I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - "increasing the risk to people, programs, and services of online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - "excluding social media users and creators from regulation";
   - "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I consider the following important policy direction:
   - "The CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   - that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sadly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators);
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

Victoria A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sadly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators);
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Victoria A. British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sadly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators);
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Victoria A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sadly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators);
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Victoria A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sadly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators);
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Victoria A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy director’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sadly and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators);
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for modifications to algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for modifications to algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made clear and accessible to me, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Virginia T. Quebec

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for modifications to algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for modifications to algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithms attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made clear and accessible to me, so we don’t lose access to these services.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Vladimir A. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wakkas S. Manitoba

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “that the CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   - and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wade Z. Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations completely. Any measure implemented at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations completely. Any measure implemented at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations completely. Any measure implemented at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   c. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   d. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations completely. Any measure implemented at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "enabling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wayne D. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "enabling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wayne C. Alberta

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "enabling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wayne B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "enabling social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction result in across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to use for me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and roles driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I am a senior with eyes that are wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.

I have been known to have open my eyes and ears wide open. I trust you will be wise enough to take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to radically and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I urge to require my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. [the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final versions of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithms entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I consider that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wendy K. Ontario
Wendy M. Alberta
Wendy T. British Columbia
Wendy N. Alberta
Wendy A. British Columbia
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the content or audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the content or audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the content or audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of the content or audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction sets out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to clarify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. Secondly, I urge you to clarify and enhance the following commitments in the final direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Will B. Alberta

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

William M. Nova Scotia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

William D. Prince Edward Island

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to sufficiently and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “[c] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

William C. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”; and
   d. “that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am asking you to ensure that the final versions of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to online users and, any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be made before they are put into effect.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William A
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William B
British Columbia

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William C
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William D
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William E
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William F
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William G
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William H
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William I
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William J
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William K
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William L
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William M
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William N
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William O
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William P
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William Q
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William R
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William S
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William T
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William U
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William V
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William W
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William X
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William Y
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.

William Z
Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to modify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. I trust you will take feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in this final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
   b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
   c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithmic attention entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

5. Freedom of speech and individual choice cannot and should not be dictated by service providers, we are not children that need to be guided in our choice of content. Public services are meant to serve us not govern our choices.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

William A. Ontario
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wilma W. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Wyatt B. Ontario

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
- “[the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
- and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I am crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am writing to you today and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   - “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   - “including social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, I urge the CRTC to “consider audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotional opportunities created by Bill C-10’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

- “Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need for additional algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
- “Including social media users and creators in the content offering to online undertakings”; and
- “That the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

II. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

III. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

IV. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   e. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   f. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   g. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   h. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   i. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   j. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   k. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   l. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   m. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   n. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   o. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   p. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   q. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   r. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   s. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   t. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   u. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   v. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   w. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   x. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   y. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   z. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   aa. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   bb. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   cc. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   dd. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   ee. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   ff. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   gg. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   hh. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   ii. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   jj. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   kk. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   ll. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   mm. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   nn. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   oo. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   pp. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   qq. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   rr. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   ss. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   tt. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   uu. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   vv. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   ww. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   xx. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.
   yy. “CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   zz. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction states out across-the-board algorithmic restrictions entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and rules driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   b. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;"
   c. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;"
   d. and the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I’m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

Zoe A.
Ontario

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction’s efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.

1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
   a. “implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings”;
   b. “excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation”;
   c. “the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators”;
   d. and that the CRTC is directed to “(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available”.

2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterations entirely. Any measure aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.

3. I am concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don’t lose access to these services.

4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11’s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.
OpenMedia is a community-based organization that safeguards the possibilities of the open Internet.