			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not in impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jodi	D.	New Brunswick	As a concerned parent in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuina Directions to the COTE (Sustainable and Emiliable Consequence). While I recognise the deals as line in the Cotte (Sustainable and Emiliable Consequence).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wyth that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jodi	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Pinaphementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs also social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "Cy' respect adjudence choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jodi	н.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. I object to censorship generally. I want the internet to be free from censorship.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jodie	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
jody	p.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
jody	p.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
jody	р.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a wythat minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
jody	р.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
jody	p.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisors in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations.  1. Entry 1. Expression of the content of the content from regulations of the content from regulations or the regulations or the content from regulations or the regulation
jody	p.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "RTCs id directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
jody	p.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in the control of
jody	p.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following judiance in the pacific policy direction:  a. 'Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation";  c. [ the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and evalues
jody	p.	Alberta	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [ their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and evalues and evalu

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joe	v.	Ontario	Control of the Contro
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from redulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joe	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Joe	0.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
loe	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
300		Coldinoid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Joe	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joe	3.	Ontario	You Communist scum will lose in the end!  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joe	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content must be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joe	T.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulurion social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exacologistical metals are an elementary and the content from Egulation, and the content from Egulation, and the content from Egulation and Content from Egulation a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joel	R.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Joel	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joel	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joel	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed "(c)" expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Joel	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me to hoose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joel	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose requisionry requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
leel		Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Joel	К.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juei	K.	Albeita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRT is directed not to impose regulation", on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joel	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joel	F.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Johan	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Johan	W.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I yould like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "C) crepecte audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Johanna	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. "By "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Johanna M	R.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed by "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression. It is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Johannes	K.	Ontario

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			De de la contract de la contrac
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	S.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
301111		Nova Scotta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	В.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chave whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	J.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," d. and that the CRCT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	G.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	G.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the notiny direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	м.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  h. "evuluting social media users and reservant and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	D.	Quebec

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRI C (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Hamework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the rolivoung gluciacle. In the place prescriber: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "YRCT is directed not to impose regulation", on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evuluting oncil media users, and rearbors and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy directors:  1. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_the) "CNC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bee access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", the provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the loop is direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to unline expression, I am asking you to soliuny and eminance tiese communities in one inserversion.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoversority provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of processing uncertaintings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to to "Cyl respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
lohn	e	0-4

			As a second control in Conde I are substitute on the Order Institute to the COTO (Contribute to the COTO )
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Excluding social metale uses a fine time forms a fine time form (Figure 1).  C [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
john	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", second my social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Pristy, I would like to exprises my strong support for the tollowing guidance in the policy offerction: a "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay with att minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay with att minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c. [the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Excluding social metale users and returns a fault are inclination of the control of the cont
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "evulution social media users and rearbors and their content from regulation is a social media users and rearbors and their content from regulation is a social media users and rearbors and their content from regulation is a social media user.
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	Α.	Ontario

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTO (Sustainable and Equitable Decadesting Documents). While I recognize the decadesting Documents.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing social means are a rule results and rule in contact from Egulation, " C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cyc respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	z.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitor y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	c	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and resurvas and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
301111		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding soids media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implicit long userview about provisions in the yet lost imminized ten each of the content from regulation",  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] 'CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CNTC is directed "(c) 'respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	Α.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	-	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joini		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	ь.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	P.	Manitoba

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and In CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and In CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	F.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	V.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; "membernating discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet or a later algorithms of productsing undertakings;     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
30111		Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "mplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	D.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			<ul> <li>exclusing social mean users and creators and their content from regulation;</li> <li>c. Ethei "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	В.	Alberta	a usas you mit case my requests mus consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty 1 widout like to express in young support to the tollowing glutance in the point of metalotts.  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "RTCs id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	к.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
John	3.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JOINI	J.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online advisations in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c)" (expect advince choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambliquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
john	m.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	0.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online uncertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that "CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online uncertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that "CRTC is directed or 'o' (respect audience choice and where possible, increase the outlone swallable".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambliquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
lohn		Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JOHN	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reputation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			naute where usey unlose on Least.  I trust you will ake my feedback into consideration.
John	b.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, turge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	м.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Excluding social meta-base and useful and regulation; cf. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	R.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	М.	Ontario	The CRTC is a dinosaur of an organization that most people don't care about. Stick to your terrestrial radio and television and leave internet alone. You're forcing everyone to get a VPN and go to the dark web.  As a concerned Professor and researcher representing small scale creative industry and educational activities, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to SOLIDIFY AND GREATIV ENHANCE these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The research of my colleagues and students is threatened by sensoring knowledge we need for Canada 8htrilectual knowledge base. Do not protect loud can con media content intetests at the expense of pur diversity. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose
			access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	D.	Ontario	A WORK FOR THE WORK HIS CONTROL CONTRO

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Concernoe person in Lanaca, a making you to solidify and enhance these commitments on the University in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRTs directed not introduce requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. 10 further schedights these confinements of the design of the confinement of the confi
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			niasce where only choose to cleate. This bill is every choose to cleate. This bill is every choose of cleate. This bill is every totaliarian. I That you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. 10 further schedights these confinements of the design of the confinement of the confi
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			make where only knobe to deate. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter allogarithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Make absolutely sure that "FREEDOM OF SPEECH" is the ONLY direction
John	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			o. and unit the CNC is united up (1), personal processor and processor a
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Most Canadians do not encourage nor appreciate government interfering in our choices for viewing content, it is a choice of the individual to decide what content best suites their views or ideas of entertainment.
John	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	Ь.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C_full_Visit_solid both to implove regulatory requirements of in time trade training in respect to florigation by Such an interest to the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and the CRTC is di
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
John	Α.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. For starters i do not believe we should be trying to force garbage content on canadians just because it was made in canada having to meet a % critiria of canadian content on platforms only promotes mediocrity why try to make the best content if you don't have to compete with the best to be successfull. It only cause canadian content creators to be lazy.
			2.I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from regulation", soil media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 1" CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			3. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change whether to make use of them.
			4. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  5. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
1-4		Allec *:	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	Н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unamolguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Canada is rapidly becoming a 3rd world banana republic under the present Liberal/ NDP Gov't, please halt this decline. Suppression of truth is a suppression of human rights.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", social media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be to fine policy direction unless out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be used to fine.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John & Margaret	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose w <hether make="" of="" td="" them.<="" to="" use=""></hether>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			Why is our government trying to turn our country into a communist type regime, that won't work? There will be a rebellion.
John J	A.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Johnathon	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joinethon	3.	Colditibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Johnny	н.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metical bases and useful control in the regulation; c. (the) "CRCT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jon	T.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion or a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
jon	0.	Nova Scotia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jon	Р.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			La Timple-mention discoverability provisions in a peoply that minimizes the unique for an adjoint most of provisions in a peoply that minimizes the adjoint most provisions and rearrange and rearrange and the provisions and rearrange and their content from requisition?  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition"  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not be impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adjoint ence tokice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ion	Α.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
lon	D.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
lon Phillip	Υ.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
on rillip		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
lonagh	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
onah	b.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding scaling media users and rearbors and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ionathan	L.	Nova Scotia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'CP' (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
jonathan	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			pose to dinine expression, and sating you to sounty and entities the minimal times united united by the state of the state
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users ilse me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me no dependent on the control of the con
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Jonathan	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	i i		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Jonathan	Υ.	Ontario
			As a concent person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter along-ordness of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c, (the) *CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no match where victors to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	Н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crepects underne choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolution; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolution; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolution; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolution; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolutions are social media users."
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
lonathan	L	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
- Jinualan	_	_ nund	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory reguirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	v.	Saskatchewa n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wy that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. that that the KRTC is directed "Cy' (expecte adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Jonathan	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan		Pilotitu	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	T.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Jonathan	D.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	T.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			to. exclusing social melan users and treates and their content from Egulation in     (The) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Jonathan	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Jonathan	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	Б.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [.the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jonathan	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			instead where user closes to desire.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
jonn	l.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Textbuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. Textbuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Joonee	I.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Journe		Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRITC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Jordan	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Jordan	v.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jorddil	v.	Jinalio	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jordan	K.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Charlest person is disease, all in diseas
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wyth that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jordan	w.	Ontario	A CONTRACTOR OF THE PROPERTY O
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wyst that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			us must use CAC is infected on (b) respect advantage continued in the continued and in the co
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JORDAN	F.	Manitoba	A CONTRACT OF THE PROPERTY OF
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			a. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jordan	к.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wyth that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online netrakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jordan	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wyth that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jordan	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Exclusing social metal users and creative and user content from Egulation ;  (c) the j "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jordan	F.	Columbia	NO CENSORSHIP.
			FREE SPECH. UNBIASED COMPREHENSION.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jordan	н.	Ontario	a uusi yuu mii taac iiry ieeuuda. iittu tulistuelduul.

			As a concerned Canadian, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), I am asking you to solidify and enh.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and I'st the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be evoluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me does whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JORDAN	F.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-bard algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to success like me, and any CNEC-directed changes to how online about
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which series should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jose	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a training a many containing the state of th
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josee	T.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. *Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from explaints.  Social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of sould media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a training and update in the properties of the p
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josefina	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and online foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joseph	D.	Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalistion".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-Circlercted changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  A bathy Luran the inclusion of a direction to occurs fair and equal treatment for all Capadian police creators. Any financial or promotion expectation must be equally available to all Capadian police creators.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joseph	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks noted to noting everyoscion. I am action you to collection and analyze those commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and In Text CRTC is directed to "Cyl respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; the contraction of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by bill C-11 s implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JOSEPH	H.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joseph	Y.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joseph	D. K.	Ontario Ontario	Bill C-11 is complete nonsense!!! This bill needs to be scrapped!! Immediately!!! Waste of tax payers money!!!  As a concerned person in Canada. I consider Bill C-11 to be a horrible piece of legislation at best. So, until another covernment repeals it. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joseph	к.	Ontario	I really don't care if Canadian media companies are doing well or not. All my life I've been told to work harder and earn my own life. Why do big crown media corporations get free handouts from the taxpayers? Give that money to hospitals or teachers
JOSEPH	М.	Ontario	or the homeless. They all deserve it more than Rogers, Bell and the CBC. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Joseph	S.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josephine	М.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and whele content from requisition";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josette	w.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josh	М.	Ontario

			As a second down in Conde Low should be a second to the Conde Low in State Sta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. excluding social metical bases and useful control regulation; c. (Enb) "CRTS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Josh	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Josh	v.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	S.		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josh	5.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Josh	к.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JUSII	K.	Columbia	I honestly just want to be able to view whatever new and media is available and make the decision myself if it is fact or false. Thank you for your time
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josh	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIc is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTIc is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
JOSHUA	v.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Joshua	B.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding soal media users and recreators and their content from recoulation".
			b. Excluding social needs does and releast some cases and releast some content from regulation; c. (t.be) "CRCI is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concend that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a second s
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	Р.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "and the state CRC is directed to "(C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRC is directed to "(C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertains on respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concend that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	R.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	V.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Joshua	P	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "INTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			<ol> <li>The concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> </ol>
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	w.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalation", social media users and creators and their content from requalation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (RTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  STOP GOVERNMENT OVERREACH NOW
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joshua	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators'; d. and 'tarCRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Josipa	E.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Joslyn	N.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
JUSIYII	N.	Colditiola	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joy	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implement soical media users and reators and restore the content of the conte
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
1		Albert

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Selective funding and censorship are control mechanisms. All those in support of selective funding and censorship need to be fired immediately.
Joyce	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joyce		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Joyel	н.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juan	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juan	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juan	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to online expression, I am assing you to soliuny and ennance triese commitments in the rinal version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in any that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. I or untreer strengthen these commitments to individual croice and expression, it is crucial that the male version or the policy direction rules out across-the-load agricultural alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the notify direction backs charry on which services should be requisited, and risks driving small and niche fineign services up to 2 anada. The final direction must define the anomonisties score of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Juan	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judii	K.	Albei (3	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS" directed not to impose regulation yr equirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Judith	G.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). I would prefer the governm
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimitares the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			to. Exacuting social metal users and return with regulation, "  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judith	н.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address sthe risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judith	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			2. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  3. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and increase the platform options available".
			4. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			5. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada, whilh I am completely against. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			6. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter how small they are or where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judith	s.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on oriline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "O'c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judith	Р.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRT is directed not to impose regulation", and or undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Judy		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition", social media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understaings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and other content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	D.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRLC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the ploidy operations: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wey that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c) [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Judy	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and held routnet from requiation".</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Judy	M.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ their TCRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interdatings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KCRTC is directed by 'Cyr respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			 Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juergen	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to omine expression; a mil asking you to soundy also eminate uses communities in the miles version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juergen	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jules	N.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRITC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRITC is directed by "Crit procedure diverse content and increases the oothood as available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julia	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concent that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	anatter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Iulia	T	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. Itsel "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (°) (creators audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			as Two concentrations that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and notice foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julia	H.	Columbia	Hello, I watched much of the debate on this Bill in the Senate and many of the parties were very concerned with this Bill as was I. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Isasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julia	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Seed-unline and support and express and discoverable from poul store".
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julian	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a say that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and or to "c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julian	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julian	P.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should <ol> <li>Io further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julian	В.	Alberta	It is table upposes as control. It accounts freedom of speech
Julian	В.	Alberta	It is total unnecessary control. It prevents freedom of speech.  I don't agree with the bill and I am of the opinion that it should be scrapped.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julianna	М.	Ontario

			As a supposed opera in Constal I am submitted my companies on the Code Territor Directions to the CPTC (Suchainskie and Fullshie Read-stalls Read-stall
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "exulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			to. Exacuting social metals uses and return with regulation; and the control of the state of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Juliano	D.	Quebec	As a concerned operan in Canada. Law submitting we commonts on the Order Insuing Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Production Population Francescales that destination is direction's fifteet to address the risks.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julie	Α.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
julie	r.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julie	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Julie	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
June	٥.	JINGIN	Dear Fellow Canadian,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exacional social metale users and return contain from registrom, respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julie	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			o. Exhaulting social metale users and return content from regulation,"  C. Exhaulting social metale users and return content from regulation, and the content from the content f
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julie	L.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. exclusing solar intensit users and Letter with regulation in the control of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julieta	C.	British Columbia	As a second opera in Casada, I am submittion museumments on the Order Insuine Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilable Development Operation Regulators Example and Milde I appropriate the death college.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Julija	s.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to a dater algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Julio	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Q' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	к.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to to timpose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	D.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulations." b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. and that the CRIT is directed to "following choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRIT is directed to "following choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks callry to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unannahimunsity, so we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	0.	Ontario

			As a concerned according to Chanda, I am submitted my composition to the Order Insuland Control of
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "exulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			in the securing social meta-dises and creations and meta-content from regular undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect auglement choice and, where possible, increase the options available;
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Justin	D.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	Б.	Hamitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	G.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	Y.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin	S.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. If this forced change comes to the algorithms, I believe it now becomes a basic form of censorship because trying to find the content I'm looking for will be buried and very difficult to find.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Justin	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justin		Pilotitu	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social metal seets and treature and their content from regulation; a certain content seet and treature and the content from regulation; a certain certain seet and the content seet and t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justina	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed by (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Justyna	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jutta	М.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Jytte	E.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			7. Lasty, 1 uge us in Last one substance of a last case in an acquair ceation of an Canadan online Ceators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
к	В.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerned person in Clanaba, I am subunitum gmy comments on the Urber Issuing Directions to the URL Clustrainable and Equitable proaccasing Regulatory Framework), while I appreciate the draft policy direction is errors to adoress the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the rolinowing guidancie in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [me] UNIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online unpertainings in respect or programs or social means creators; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. 1 or turner strengmen triese commitments to nonvolusi crinoice and expression, it is crucial that the mal version of me policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Landaulan content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
K	K.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Conceine person in Calabac, if an included, and in Calabac, the Conceined person in Calabac, and in Calab
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implemention discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation'; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutinary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. LEASY, Turge to Efficication of a Direction or a
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
K	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Also, this cooperation was never supported to be a tyrannical dictatorship!  We see what your doing. We are not your slaves!!
		British	we see what your coing. We are not your siaves!!
К	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules our across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutinary and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them.
			3. I'm encement that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and undertakings of the properties o
			4. Lastyl, I urg be inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kacey	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it extent norm regulators. For the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			induct where they under to the extent of the
Kade	T.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			Les voultaits year opposition to does also like line, and any Conscience continued to line appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kae	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei \CRIT is directed not to impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm oncemed that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unmanagements, one don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kaila	3.	Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Adiid	J.	.1	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be evolutinary and optional to users ilse me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty. Turge to the following of the control of
			I do not want the CRTC to decide what content I can read or see nor cut off news, etc from the public to see. I feel citizens have the right to read and keep up with news or whatever they want.
16.71	_	0.11.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kaila	F.	Ontario

			As a second control of
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kait	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation."  C [the] "CRTs directed not to impose regulation; requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kali	v.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kara	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. d. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	w.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	M.	Ontario

			As a concepted person in Canada, I am submitting my composition to the Order Israina Disortions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Escillable Decidence). While I according to the
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content front regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Karen	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
karen	b.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed by (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
karen	j.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "o' (o' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way rust minimizes the need to after algorithms or incadasting undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy! expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Karen	L.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CKTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			SCRAP BILL C-11. IT SERVES NO PURPOSE FOR EVERYDAY CITIZENS AND ONLY PUTS MORE POWER IN THE HANDS OF THE GOVERNMENT. GOVERNMENTS SHOULD NOT BE INVOLVED IN DECIDING WHAT SOCIAL STANDARDS MUST BE. THEIR JOB IS TO COLLECT ONLY ENOUGH TAXES TO PROVIDE THE SERVICES THEY WERE ORIGINALLY DESIGNED TO PROVIDE.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding soal media users and creators and their content from recoulation".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Furthermore this is supposed to be a free country and this bill screams communism and shouldn't have passed because we have dictators in parliament undermining the wishes of Canadians! Do right by us or we will take the necessary steps to take our country and our personal lives and freedoms back!
Karen	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soal media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. Excluding social nesula sees and creations and user control regulatory, from the property of the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CKTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karen	E.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (thei "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CNTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Karim	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requialision",
			b. Excluding social nesula sees and creations and user control regulatory, from the property of the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karin	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To further screighten cheek committed charge to move and expression, is a Guida that the mind vestor of the pointy precion in use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be recoulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Karin	Α.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karine	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karl	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
W. 1	,	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karl	J.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online advisations in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c)" (expect advince choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Karl	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			to. Exacularly social metale users and return with regulation, "  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I grige the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			It would be prudent for the new CRTC boss to understand what the people of Ontario and Canada are looking for in this new policy framework.
Karl	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "imolementino discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Karl	R.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy' expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karl	D.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a Concerned person in Canada, a similar submitted in the Canada Concerned person in Canada, a similar submitted in the Canada Concerned person in Canada, a similar submitted in the Canada Concerned person in
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
karla	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2: to further screening these commissions to the whole the commission of the commiss
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
karla	C.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Karlene	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Karol	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
real of		Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't loss access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Karol	V.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
KdIUI	٧.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the   "CRIF is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Katarxyna	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kate	L	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kate	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kate	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osical media users and creators and their content from regulation", since the content of t
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kateri	Р.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Contenting person it failable, it is in It failable, it is it is classed, and it is classed as a content of the content o
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "Expression of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Katherine	м.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CMTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CMTC is directed to "Cy' crepects underne choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Katherine	К.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it extent norm regulation. The control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Katherine	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "foy' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Katherine	м.	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
rathetine	PTI.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [. their CRIC is directed not to impose regulation year undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I believe that, no matter what is included in the policy direction, the government must treat the internet, social media, and other parts of digital communications, as a utility available to everyone. It must not be treated as part of the economy controlled by business interests rather than public interests.
W-11	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Katherine	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. that that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathia	T.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
KATHIE	E.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathleen	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understaings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			1. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathleen	J.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "deviduring social media users and resizents and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kathleen	К.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	Ĭ.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vethless	u	British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathleen	W.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguouslys, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathleen	T.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathrine	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "TRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
V-th		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathryn	S.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Kathryn	S.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
Kathryn	S.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Kathryn	S.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and help content from resulation".
Kathryn	S.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to I'cg respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should te me choose whether to make use of them.
Kathryn	S.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to it or impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Kathryn	S.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes here here to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction in Canadian. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastyl, I are the inclusion of a direction to exerve fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
Kathryn	5. F.		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes here act to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'c) (erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables";  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks caterity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes here act to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation', along in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concended that the policy direction lacks call carrily on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and E
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concended that the policy direction lacks calcularly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "RTC is directed to it's directed commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks carriary on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreci
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "RTC is directed to it's directed to it's directed to it's directed to it's directed on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to it's directed on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to it's directed on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to it's directed on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to it's directed on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to it's directed in commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitab
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation',  c. (the) "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaking in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed to to repect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CETC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CETC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. The further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CETC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  2. The comment of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. Franch of the control of the following guidanc
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canado, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, 1 rough land late to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Firstly, 1 rough land late of the policy direction in the policy direction of the policy direction of the policy direction in the policy
		Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the nisks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firely, I needed like to express my strong support for the following guidents to all the properties of broadcasting undertakings';  1. Firely, I needed like to express my strong support for the following guidents to all the properties of broadcasting undertakings';  1. Firely, I needed like to express my strong support for the following guidents of an expression of the properties of broadcasting undertakings';  1. Firely, I needed like to express my strong support for the following guidents of the properties of th
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned person in Canado, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, 1 rough land late to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. Firstly, 1 rough land late of the policy direction in the policy direction of a direction to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  3. If the CRTC is directed to (C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available';  3. If the concerned that the policy direction lates can't be received by the concerned of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Im concerned that the policy direction lacks darriy on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. If a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am saling you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  3. Firstly, Investilla list to express my first on support for the floriburing guidance in the papicy direction.  3. Programment of control of the
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, Invaded like to express my return guspoor for the floridoring guidance in the policy direction.  2. The proposed discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings;  3. Firstly, Invaded like to express my return asking you to solidly and enhance these commitments to individual charges in respect of programs of foodial media cerators';  4. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Co' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available, to the committed of the committee of the comm
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned person in Canada, I am automitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidily and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I model like in expression yet promoting paper for the Individual guidance in the longity direction.  2. In Firstly and the comment of
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned perpos in Caradab, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am address you to soldify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  I. Fristy, I housed like to express my return guidance in the policy direction.  I. Fristy, I housed like to express my return guidance in the policy direction on a many that minimizes the need to after algorithms of providents in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of providents in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of providents in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of providents in a way that the CRTC is directed to try or respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  I a first the CRTC is directed to 'Cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  I a first the CRTC is directed to 'Cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  I a first the CRTC is directed to 'Cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  I a first the CRTC is directed to 'Cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  I a first the cRTC is directed to 'Cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  I a first the cRTC is directed to 'Cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.'  I a first the cRTC is directed to 'Cry respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the object direction cannot be addressed to the cannot and a providence to cannot and a provide
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directors to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am adding you to soldify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I hould be to express my strong apport for the following guidance in the policy direction: 2. Implication of the commitments of the commitmen
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to contine expression. I am saking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I most like to express my strong upport for the following outdoors the meet to all the adjustment of the continued
Kathryn		Ontario British	As a concerned person in Carseda, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am address you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Fristy, I would be the expression of the property of the commitments of the control of the property of the commitments of the control of the property of the control of the

			As a concepted person in Canada, Lam submitting my composition to the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Establish Residential Resi
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social metal users and user and section and an expect of programs of social media creators";  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathy	м.	Alberta	As a concerned normal is a numerities any commenter on the Order I region Directions to the COTC (Sustainable and Equilibries Regulation Decelators, Example of the Commenter of the Cotton of the Cot
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathy	K.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kathy	c.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media or eaters of the content from where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kathy	v.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
kathy	m.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and relations and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and creators and their content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTL's directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks carried you within services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and inambiliariously. So we don't how across to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Katie	3.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media tusers and rice to the content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media tusers and rice to the content from regulation"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Katie	L.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Katrina	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't hose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kaz	Υ.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. In my own words as a layman, I don't want the crtc determining what I see in my feed. I don't want the government messing with the algorithms. c-11 should be demolished, and the same should be done to the crtc, and anyone that supported bill
			eii.
			I don't trust you will take my feedback into consideration, because the government of Canada is a joke, and the out of touch politicians writing this legislation think the internet is the same thing as the radio. It's pathetic and embarrassing on a global level, makes me feel ashamed to be Canadian.
Kazimer	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Keaton	к.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Keenan	O.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Keif	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c)" (expect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Keisha	B	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			<ul> <li>a. exclusing social media users and creators and meir content from regulation from regulation (regulation).</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	v.	d and Labrador
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			b. exclusing social means and used social series in the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Keith	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. exclusing social means and sections and series of the section o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy indiction lacks carried in alcohold in services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerning resort in calleage, it an incidence of the concerning in continuing in
			a. "Implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding osicl media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	D.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
KEITH	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
KEIIII	171.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
17.70		Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverations provisions in a way trust imminizes the need to after adjustments of troductioning undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media cereators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	0.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  Why is the government promoting and advocating for censorship and restriction of free speech? Is this the world that you want to leave for your children and grandchildren? In essence a world that mirrors '1984'.
			"If you want to know who controls you, look at who you are not allowed to criticize." - Voltaire "No society can surely be flourishing and happy, of which the far greater part of the members are poor and miserable." - Adam Smith
			"Good people do not need laws to tell them to act responsibly, while bad people will find a way around the laws." - Plato
			1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*;
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			. Lossy, 1 use the inclusion of a unecutor to ensure fair and equal treatment for an Canadian online creators, Any minutes or promotion opportunities created by an C-113 implementation mass be equally evaluate to an Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keith	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelli	G.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kellie	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	Р.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRT's directed to "for respect audignine choice and, where possible, increase the options available", excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation and their content of the second social media creators"; d. and that the CRT's directed to "for respect audignine choice and, where possible, increase the options available", excluding social media creators and the second social media creators and the second social media creators.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	E.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[O'] respect adiagines choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation;  d. and that the CRIT is directed to "for respect audignines choice and, where possible, prorease the ootions and examples."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	F.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kelly	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users nearbase and their content from regulation", social media users and reators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	н.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	к.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to ("C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	I.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should allow me the choice to turn them on or off.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelly	R.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  net freedom is the only option you should be reviewing.
			Placing policy that forces content providers and users to view what the government deems most (Clanadian content) imported sets scary president that is presently only being done by Russia and china.
			this puts entroparues like myself to the botem of the list in Europe and the rest of north America.  i would like to thank you for destroying my startup before it is even lauched.
kelly	d.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelsey	В.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. excluding Social meta-base had used social regulation ; c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kelsey	K.	Manitoba

Simply put, Canada is still, and hopefully will always remain a democracy. This concept is not a given, it must be fought for, which we, the electorate look to those of you we voted for and placed in the ke, Canadians are bearing to the world and cost of how danearous monopoles are in Canada, whether it be by way of the elecommunications industry, oil, asselectricity, and now the groncer industry for the food we inpest?) This Bill has the potential of serious consortily being imposed on what Canadians can view, or not view. This is this equivalent of book banning that we are already witnessing in the US and around the world, but also reminiscent of book burning in the 1930s. You mustn't leave these looples opened evil consourable, if it's not, they won't. Free markets determine consumption, which requires good content to either to stand on its own merits, or they fall, it's just that simple. We are losing this concept as noted in the above examples. History and even current events show(n) us just how dangerous this ideology is. Are we incapable of learning the lessons of the past, or are we doorned to repeat it? On a personal note, I was a consumer of our local CBC news for years, however, its platform has been derailed to something similar to an infomercial. This 'dumbing down' of Canadians is not an environment for a flourishing de As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 c. (the) "CNTC is directed to into impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to "Cy' respect audione choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm walteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be not enclosed or optional to uses risk me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be se 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks d to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

 in the policy direction of th 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at pibe voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be se 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian on As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertake.
 b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Cante be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian nature where they choose to create. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks are posed to entine expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from reoulation". c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the goldy director nutles out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sh the be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be the choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking vut to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:

 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", C (the) CYRT is directed for not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
 C and that the CRT is directed for (C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.

 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content si be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no name the where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 C. (the) "CNTC is directed to from the proper of the properties of the properties of social media creators";
 d. and that the CNTC is directed to (C) respect auditone choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
 "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
 "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
 (. the) CYRTC is directed to I'clo presept audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out access the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users to CRTC-directed changes to how online alcorithms work should the major should be used without a contract of the contract 3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambioguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online matter where they choose to create. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulsation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ken	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c, the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ken	d.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			To start censorship and controlling what people see is WRONG and I am discussed that it is even being brought up. It shows the incompetence of the government of today. I do not believe there is anybody in politics that so noble and wise as to make decisions as to what people can see. Who is going to protect us from you. I implore you to read history books. You are settling this country up to regress as a society.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ken	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Ken	Α.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			to. Excluding social metale users and user and section and an expect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kendall	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", ("thei "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Prince	Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenneth	Р.	Edward Island
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
KENNETH	C.	Ontario

Kenneth L.	Ontario	posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong upport for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in 5 keys that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". c. [ the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of it the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them the programs of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them the programs of the policy direction rules can be added to the policy direction and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities cre
Kenneth L.	Ontario	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media acreators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) crepecte undernet son online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) crepecte undernet son online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) crepecte undernet so online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'C) crepecte undertaking of the programs of social media creators in the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Kenneth L.	Ontario	d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Kenneth L.	Ontario	be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Kenneth L.	Ontario	3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Kenneth L	Ontario	4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Kenneth L.	Ontario	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Kenneth L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Kenneth L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
		Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
		a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
		d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
		<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction use out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenneth C.	Ontario
		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
		b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (E) (Te) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
		2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
		be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		3. It follow that the plats whether the state of the plats whether
		4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenneth C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
		<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
		c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media reations?; d. and 1CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available*.
		2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		unaminguously, so we durn does access ou mess earwes.  A lastly, I upper be inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenneth S.	Ontario
		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
		b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
		d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
		be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		4. Lissty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenneth M.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
		c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
		2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		matter where they choose to create.
		The street was will have any forestern the appropriate
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," (; the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underlakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,  c. [they CRTC's directed not to impose regulation; regulation; respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [ C the] "RTIC is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and acquession, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on mainline understakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provision in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and, where possible, increase the options available." 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. I am very concerned with the rules surrounding the determination and assignment of Canadian content' ? The designation
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [ the] "RTIC is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. I am very concerned with the rules surrounding the determination and assignment of Canadian content "status. Will media created by a Canadian-US dual clitzer, such as David Frum for example, be considered "Canadian content"? The designation of "Canadian Content" should be interpreted in the most likeral possible so as not to exclude creators who create media content that is Canadian, whether they
Kenneth N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the neet to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation,"  c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should be true choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and nich foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. I am very concerned with the units surrounding the determination and assignment of Canadian content" should be interpreted in the most liberal possible so as not to exclude creators who create media content that is Canadian, whether they, personally, are Canadian or even living in Canada or from Canadian sources.

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Envisable Developering Developering Developering Developering Developering Developering Developering
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenny	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kenny	C.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kent	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIS id induced not impose regulation", requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keren	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keren	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy' lesseet adulence choice and, where cossible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keri	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Korri		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned accord in Canada. I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTE (Containable and Equilibrium Properties and Equilib
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content from requisition".
			b. exclosing social media desist and deactors and their content norm registration from registration fr
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
kerri	g.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kerri	C.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator prequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kerry	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' expect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kerry	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) respect audionized robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Keti	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	L.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	-	a Joua	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "Implications" particularly protections by reliable to the way four minimized over account of the control of
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kevin		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTY (Sustainable and Equitable Boodessting Doublasses Forwards). While I consultate the dark
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that inimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing social means are a rule results and rule in contact from Egulation, " C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	0.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTs dis directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understangs"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose requisionry requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	S.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			, and the second
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	м.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ithe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	w.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulator yr equirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	3.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatior yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CNTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
KEVIN	F.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	Ċ.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and retards and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "the CRTC is directed to (°) (er sepect audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".  Here is a considerable of the c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me change use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiouously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oxid) and in users and creators and their content from requisition".
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. It hat "CRIC Is directed not to impose regulator you requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			If fully support the government's long-overdue online regulation efforts and I hope they do not cave in to threats from multinational megacorporations like Google, Facebook, etc. or listen to their thinly-veiled faux activist groups like OpenMedia which do not appear to have a genuine interest in consumer protectionism.
			All threats or actions from Google, Facebook, etc. should be met with even stronger regulation. They must learn that governments exist to serve the people, not corporations, and foreign-owned entities must contribute to the Canadian economy not steal content from our undervalued journalists and content creators.
Kevin	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and that the LRTC is directed to (L) respect administration for the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be contained as the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulgance choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambibuously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
kevin	a.	Saskatchewa n
			This email is a comment on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" crespect audiancer choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely! Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let ME choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services!
			Lastly, I urg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	L.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the): CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm processed that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be resultated, and ricks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scrope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Canada does not need a Great Firewall like some other nations have. While C-11 does not yet directly implement such, slopes tend to steepen and get slippery. Let us not start our way down that slope.
Kevin	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kevin	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content show be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kevin	T.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Khaled	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Khalil	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me tows whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kidus	Υ.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kim	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] *CRTs id indexed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
V:		Alban	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kim	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a wav that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kim	A.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks nosed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kim	F.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kim	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Vi-	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
KIM	м.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't bee access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kim	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			5.1 in Unterfled that the plots which had been services.  3.1 in Unterfled that the plots which had been services and the plots which had been services on the plots which had been services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kim	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me to whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			A Lastly, I gree the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kim A.	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a year but that minimizes the needs of alter allowances in considerations."
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kimberlea	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kimberley	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kimberly	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that imininizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kipp	w.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discureability provisions in a ways that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscial media users and creators are creators and creators and creators and creators are creators and creators are creators and creators
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kirk Kirk	H. P.	Nova Scotia Alberta	As a person born on Canadian soil, I'd like the Canadian government to stop trying to tell me what to hear and see online or otherwise. Abolish the whole C-11 bill and start serving the people of Canada instead of the pocket books of a few.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kirsten	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kirsten	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC 5 directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Klara	В.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Knowles	M.	Ontario

			As a concentral corresponding the control of the Code Technical Co
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kori	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kosika	J.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Krista	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Krista	N.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristal	н.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b.  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory, requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristeen	m.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online interlatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and unit the Unit is of included to (f) respect advantage in the same included in the control of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Vrietol	c	British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbox and their content form penulation".
			b. exclusing social metal uses and it extent norm regulators. In our regulators and user understand in our regulators (r. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristen	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kristen	к.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (t.he) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristen	М.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil amedia users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audionise choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristi	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristin	S.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks drivino small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
W. Salta		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristina	M.	columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kristina	K	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
straurid

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbox and their content form penulation".
			b. exclusing solar intensit users and Letter in the regulator in the regul
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kristyn	н.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. Ithel "CNTC" is directed to rol (or respect audionizes choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CI respect audionizes choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CI respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. d. and that the CRTC is directed to "CI respect audionize choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. "The control of the control of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Krystie	P.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Krzysztof	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CKTC is directed to not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of program of social media creators"; d. and that the CKTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where pussible, increase the options available".  d. d. and that the CKTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where pussible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kurt	0.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kurt	C.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dainty on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unantihinususly. So we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyla	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where pussible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	F.	Nova Scotia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Kyle	P.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from reoutation"</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks cosed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kyle	J.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscila media users and creators and help crother from regulation".
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambliquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	K.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (.the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	м.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual rolicie and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be to further strengthen these commitments to individual rolicie and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be the policy direction rules out a content of the policy direction rules out a
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Kyle	н.	British Columbia	I am against this bill in every way. This bill will only serve to limit freedoms of Canadians. It is anti trusting against the people by the government, essentially saying we need some kind of online babysitter to keep us safe from the tyranny of fake news.
			Intelligent people can tell the difference between fake and real news and I don't need big daddy government the lining me what is real and what is fake. The recent government has been shown to lie to us citizens almost daily. I stand for freedom, of sspeech and expression, including hate speech(because how will use know peoples true intentions of it they aren't allowed to speak their mindil). I am for requiation of internet in terms of the financial motivations of common citizens, required anajants.
Kyle	L.	Nova Scotia	corporations that dominate this world. All the CRTC or even Open Media does is play ball with corporate interests, and ruins the freedoms of the common person. You people are junk, so is open media, so is our government, so is this supposed democracy. I would rather anarchy then this trash. Get bent.  I am writing to express my concerns and provide comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC regarding the Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework. As a concerned individual residing in Canada, I truly appreciate the efforts made in the draft policy direction to address the potential risks that online expression may face. However, I kindly request that you solidify and strengthen these commitments in the final version.
			First and foremost, I would like to express my strong support for the following aspects outlined in the policy direction:  1. The guidance to implement discoverability provisions in a manner that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings.
			2. The exclusion of social media users, creators, and their content from regulation. 3. The directive stating that the CRITC should refain from imposing regulation regulation as the content of the cont
			4. The emphasis on respecting audience choice and, whenever possible, increasing the available options.  To further enhance these commitments and promote individual choice and expression, it is vital that the final version of the policy direction unequivocally rules out any across-the-board alteration of algorithms. Measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should remain voluntary and optional for users like myself. Additionally, any changes directed by the CRTC regarding how online algorithms function should allow users to choose whether they wish to utilize them.
			Another concern I have relates to the lack of clarity in the policy direction regarding which services should be subject to regulation. I worry that this ambiguity might lead to the unintended consequence of driving small and niche foreign services away from Canada. Therefore, it is essential that the final direction clearly and unambiguously defines the appropriate scope of online undertakings. We mustn't lose access to these valuable services.
			Lastly, I urge you to include a direction in the final policy that ensures fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. It is imperative that any financial or promotional opportunities arising from the implementation of Bill C-11 are equally accessible to all Canadian online creators, regardless of where they choose to create.
w 1.			I sincerely hope that you will take my feedback into consideration during the development of the final policy direction. Thank you for your attention to this matter.
Kyle	G.	Ontario	Yours As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT's disdirected not to impose regulation y content from or online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. Take note of the result that C-18 is bringing: a strong and unreasonable demand has hurt Canadian news instead of supporting it.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Kvle	D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT Ls directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" expect adultationer oftoic eand, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
kyriakos	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
L	0.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT Ls directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT Ls directed to "(c) respect audience rotice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian contents should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
L	L.	Saskatchewa n	A WAS TOO THE WAS THE CONSIDER BUSINESS AND THE STATE OF

		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
		<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",</li> </ul>
		c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of sold media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crepsect undelinence choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
		2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction nales out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to user like me, and any ORTC-directed changes to bow online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		matter where they choose to create.
	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
5.	Alberta	I want Canadian politicians to work for Canada. Step up and defy the WHO and WEF.
		Stand for our country!
		When the call comes, stand for all of Canada!  As a concepted person in Canada, I am submittion my comments on the Order Israilan Directions to the COTE (Sustainable and Equitable Propagation Deputation Framework). While I approximate the destination of the Comment of the Cotton Comment of the Cotton Comment of the Cotton Comment of the Cotton Co
		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
		c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of sold media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Q" or spect addinence choice and, where possible, increase the options availables".
		2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n
		matter where they choose to create.
_	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
		b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [He] "CRITG is directed not to impose regulation or notion to make a content of the co
		d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
		<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, matter where they choose to create.
		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
John H.	Ontario	The second secon
		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a wy that minimizes the need to alter adjointhms of broadcasting undertakings";
		b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
		2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sho
		be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n matter where they choose to create.
		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
4 G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
		a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
		c. [tms] 'Uxi L is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect or programs of social menia creators; d. and that the CXTE is directed to 'Q' or respect and defined crickine and, where possible, increase the options available."
		<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content she be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me hooks whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, n
		matter where they choose to create.
D.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
		b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
		d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sh
		be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
		3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, matter where they choose to create.
		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
di E.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
		posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
		1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
		u. exclusing social menia uses and ceaus and their content norm regulation;  (_the) "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
		2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content sh
		be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
		unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
		4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, natter where they choose to create.
		I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
dine R.	Alberta

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laina	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discureability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludin oscial media users and creators and their content in their content in the content of the co
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laith	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lambert	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c, the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lance	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," from regulation, continued the content from regulation, and the content from regulation (c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory regulationers on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lance	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing provisions to alter algorithms SO THAT YOU CANNOT EXCLUDE ANY SINGLE PIECE OF CONTENT";
			b. "extuding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice, NEVER CENSOR ANYTHING (SINCE YOU PROCLAIM PREVIOUSLY ILLEGAL CONTENT TO NOW BE LEGAL, THE GOVERNMENT AND ITS BODIES DO NOT HAVE THE MORAL OR INTELLIGENT AUTHORITY TO DECIDE "WHAT IS GOOD/BAD" ANYTMORE, and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction ALLOWS ALL CONTENT, REGARDLESS OF WHAT IS BEING SAID, SINCE THE 2022 FEDERAL COVERNMENT HAS DEMONSTARTED IT WILL WILD LATE THE CHARTER OF RICHTS AND FREEDOMS, THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION, AND FEDERAL LAW. THE USE OF CRIT-C-direct changes to online algorithms SHOULD BE CONSIDERED A VIOLATION OF FEDERAL LAW, PUNISHED ACCORDINALY, AND SUBJECT TO IMPRISONMENT FOR THOSE "POINT OF THEIR JOB" THAT VIOLATE PREEDOM OF SPECEH, INCLUDING ALL MINISTERIAL STAFF, DEPUTY MINISTERS AND ELECTED CABINET MINISTERS OVERSEEDING CRIT
			ACTIVITIES.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction VIOLATES THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS, THE RIGHT TO FREE SPEECH AND THE CANADAN CONSTITUTION.  THE GOVERNMENTS VIOLATION OF FEDERAL LAW DURING THE COVID OPPRESSION DEMONSTRATES THAT IT LIGHT OF A LIGHT AND INTEGRITY WHEN TARGETOMG which services should be regulated. YOU DO NOT HAVE THE RIGHT TO LIMIT FREE SPEECH, AND THE PRESENCE OF "WORDS YOU DISAGREE WITH" IS PART OF A FREE AND CRITICAL THINKING SOCIETY. TRIVING TO PROHIBIT THE TRANSFER OF IDEAS, WHETHER THROUGH PRINTED, ELECTRONIC, AUDIO OR VIDED, WILL drive small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must BE TO ALLOW FREE SPEECH, UN-COMPROMISED COMMUNICATION AND TAKE THE GOVERNMENT OUT OF CENSORSHIP EFFORTS.  4. Lasthy, THEPE MIST BE fair and equal treatment for all Canadian colone greators. ESPECIALLY THOSE WHO VOICE OPINIONS CONTRADY TO DESCRIPTE THE LIBERAL PARTY'S DESDIFE TO RECOME A DICTATORSHIP. IT IS NOT
			4. Lasty, Theke Mod Le fair and equal treatment for all calabidations become a full calculated by the fair and equal treatment for all calculations become a full calculated by the fair and equal treatment for all calculations become a full calculated by the fair and equal treatment for all calculations become a full calculated by the fair and equal treatment for all calculations become a full calculated by the fair and equal treatment for all calculated by the
			5. ANY SUBSIDIZATION OF MEDIA COMPANIES, WHETHER THEY ARE IN BROADCAST, RADIO, PRINT OR ONLINE, MUST BE STOPPED. THIS IS THE GOVERNMENT REMOVING OBJECTIVITY AND HONESTY FROM MEDIA. CANADIANS DO NOT SUPPORT SUBSIDIZATION OF MEDIA (THE TRUDEA "BUY AN ELECTION" APPROACH; SINCE IT CREATES A STATE-SPONSORED PROPAGAINDA ORGANIZATION. PRIOR TO THE NEW MILLENIA, ONLY SPONSORSHIP FINANCIALLY OF CANADIAN ARTS BEING BOADCAST WAS DONE. NOW, WHOLESALE, BILLION-DOLLAR INVESTMENT IN ENTIRE ORGANIZATIONS IS BEING DONE, TO CONTROL THE MESSAGING BEING DELIVERED BY THOSE LYING AND PRETENDING TO BE "INDEPENDENT MEDIA", WHEN BROADCAST WAS DONE. NOW, WHOLESALE, BILLION-DOLLAR INVESTMENT IN ENTITE ORGANIZATIONS IS BEING DONE, TO CONTROL THE MESSAGING BEING DELIVERED BY THOSE LYING AND PRETENDING TO BE 'INDEPENDENT MEDIA', WHEN THEY ARE BOUGHT-AND-PAID-FOR GOVERNMENT PROPAGANDISTS.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LANCE	L	П	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lander	S.	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Landon	٥.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			C. Excluding Social metal acts and set of control and the control acts and set of control acts are acts and set of control acts and set of contro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	S.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "I was a support of the property of the provisions in a way that minimizes the protons of the provisions of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Larry	L.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [] the "CRIT's directed users and creators and their content from regulation"; [] the "CRIT's directed not impose regulation on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0.11.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry		Ontario

			As a second area in Court I am a brillian and a second area in Court I am a second are
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			b. Excluding social mental basis and treative and their content from regulation, c. (Ethe) "CRT's directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	0.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "In the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Larry	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	0.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	K.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Larry	J.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed by ('p respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Larry	К.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Larry	D.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRT is directed to "(c)" respect advances choice and, where possible, increase the options available", etc. The content of the conten
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  The entirety of Bill C-11 is ill-conceived and presents the potential to seriously cripple our freedom of speech. The majority of Canadian citizens are against this bill, and it should be scrapped. The very least that politicians should do is acknowledge British	their instrusion into the rights of Canadian citizens, and rectify that overstep by revising Bill C-11 to ensure everything possible is done to ensure that freedom of expression is no way threatened.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			The bill C-11 if taken out of context could lead to dictatorial powers by the government ( CRTC ) in controlling culture. I must be in control of my own culture, not big brothers idea of what my culture should look like. I do not agree with the "Freedom Convoy" people but if Bill C-11 gets out of control then the "Freedom Convoy" will look very small compared to the push back by the rest of the country. Be very careful how you handle Bill C-11.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Larry	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionect choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laŕry	L.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooila media users and creators and their content from regulation" c. [their CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation" c. [their CRTC is directed to rot impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" expect adulationer choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed chances to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy decreases to these services, and any cut re-uncested claringes on now online algorithms work should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
lars	n.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" especta underined choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lars	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy decretion lacks carbon in services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a detection to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lars	T.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing souls means and retained in the state of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laszlo	0.	Ontario	As a concurred operation of Standa, I am publishing my comments on the Order Insuine Directions to the O'CTC (Sustainable and Equilibble Development of Development On the Order Insuine Directions to the O'CTC (Sustainable and Equilibble Development On the Order Insuine Development Order Insuine Developm
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations." d. "excluding social media users and creators." d. "excluding social media users
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Latifah	В.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" expect adulatione choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Laura	R.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	В.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	м.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
laura	c.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	В.	Ontario

			As a concerned nerson in Canada, I am submittion my comments on the Order Issuinn Directions to the O'DT (Sustainable and Envisible Providention Boundation Examendal). While I approximate the death
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	T.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Laura		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Laura	G.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	Α.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a conceiled person in Calebay, if an automating in comments or the criter issuing breatons to the criter issuing breatons to the criter issuing breatons of the criteria sound of the criteria sound is the criteria sound of the criteria sound is the
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "sevicilion social media users and restores and their content from regulation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	c	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Laura	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	W.	Coldilibia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks drivino small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laura	Р.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatiory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lauralee	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed or (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laurel	w.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lauren	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lauren	J.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCRTC is directed by "Or especte audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lauren	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, 1 will like to express my strong support for the following diance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social medial users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
aurence	Р.	Ontario	This bill severely limits Canadian freedom on the internet, and will adversely affect our ability to freely access Canadian and international content. This was a mistake from the beginning and goes completely against the previous liberal commitment to
Laurence	S.	British Columbia	free internet. This bill need a complete re-write, or better should be withdrawn. It does not protect Canadians, but rather isolates them from the rest of the world. Get rid of it!  Larry S.
			Hey there,    "I" writing to share my thoughts on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). Being from Canada and all, I really appreciate the draft policy direction's attempt to deal with the risks to online expression. However, I'm hoping you can make these efforts even better and more solid in the final version.
			First off, I totally support the following in the policy direction:  a. Making sure that the implementation of discoverability stuff doesn't mess up the algorithms of broadcasting companies too much.  b. Keeping social media users and creators and their content out of unnecessary regulation.  c. Not imposing regulatory requirements on online platforms when I comes to social media creator programs.  d. Respecting audience choice and trying to give us more options if possible.
			To make things even better for individual choice and expression, the final version should definitely rule out any blanket algorithm changes. If there's anything related to promoting Canadian content, it should be something we can opt into, not forced upon us.
			I'm worried that the policy direction isn't clear enough about which services need regulation. We don't want to drive away small foreign services that cater to specific interests. So, it's essential to define the scope of online undertakings clearly.
			Lastly, it's crucial to treat all Canadian online creators fairly and equally. Whatever financial or promotion opportunities come with Bill C-11 should be available to everyone, no matter where they create content.    Those you take my feedback into consideration.
			Thanks a lot!
aurent	М.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
aurentiu	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
aurentiu		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
aurie	Α.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from classification in the content from their content from place in the content from their content from th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
aurie	Z.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			c. [tmg] LNL is directed not compose requirements on online undertakings in respect or programs of social meana creators; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the construction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the construction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the construction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the construction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be considered to the construction of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely.
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
aurie	N.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shou
			2. To trule a serigional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
urie	S.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laurie	r.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laurie	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. "Ethe" YCRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't hose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Laurie	м.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. Texcluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "Cy lergester adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "Cy lergester adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Laurie	K.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: an implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			to. Exacuting social means are a rule causes and use content from Egundon!  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lawrence	В.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "RTCs id directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lawrence	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lawrence	B.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Capada, I am submitting my commonte on the Order Israina Disording to the COTA Containable and Envitable Decidents and Envita
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (; [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lawrence	P.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and rearbors and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' crespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lawrence	S.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the obligity direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it kie me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work in the first of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty, Turgle to left fulfation for a black of the usual care and an equal treatment for an Canadian offinite treatment of an Canadian offinite treatment of the Canadian of the Canadian offinite treatment of the Canadian
			The CRTC right now has now power. They are pawns of the two big networks controlling media in Canada
			Tine to give that Agency strong very strong powers. No more letting this two conglomerates control media in Canada  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lawrence	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to enfine expression, I am arising you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alteral appointment of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			News sites should not be regulated, I can decide for myself what I wish to read/watch. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lawrence	Н.	Ontario	While appreciating the draft policy direction's effort to address the risks exposed online, I request you solidify and enhance these commitments with your final version.
			1. I want to express support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing provisions that minimize the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. Strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression. The final version of the policy direction must rule out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me. Define CRTC-directed changes and how online algorithms work, will let me choose whether to make use of them.
			opposite to uses like time. Define CRC-Undected charges and now inimizing minimize work, win let time during which and the properties of the control of the don't lose access to these services.
			4. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure the fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you would seriously take my feedback into consideration.
lb	m.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reculation".
			c. [the] CNTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to CYC prespect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Leah	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		_ nund	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leah	P	Alberta	A vius you mit date my resource mito voilablefation.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leah	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Leanne	K	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lealine	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chosse to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leanne	T.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services. I watch many videos from other countries on gardening, canning and food preservation. These are areas that are lacking in Canadian content. I like having diversity in content.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Leanne	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation";
			b. exclusing solar integrals uses and retending solar integral in the property of the property
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lee	E.	d and Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leeana	м.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implemental discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. (the): "CKIT. is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			1. The Concentration and the planty of increases and in order to the concentration of the con
			matter where they choose to create.
LeeAnn	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "Mat RCRTC is directed to (°) (er sepect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leif	G.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excludino social media users and creators and their content from repulsation".
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and I'd TRC RCTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leif	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and treators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leigh	т.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social meals users and creators and their content from regulation;  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leigh	C.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. Canadian content should survive on their own merits, not by CRTC giving them a helping hand. Your interference only adds to the lack of entrepreneurial mindset in Canada. Get out of the way!
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leighan	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reoutation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lele	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		New	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Len	В.	New Brunswick

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Len	r.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementary discoversability provisions in a lawy that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation". c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration in the spirit that it is intended: that all dialogue should be encouraged and respected. It is only by allowing citizens to be heard on all subjects that concern their well being and by engaging in consultation that we can bring our country back into balance.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Len	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(") respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lena	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionized robice and, where possible, increase the options available"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audionized robice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Also consider the tax dollars spendthrift in this endeavor is it better to lay this down and focus on the things that matter. I see people suffering from inflation and high housing costs is this really a priority right now. The less time the government spends in the personal choices of the people the more time it can spend to ensure economic stability and the wise use of tax dollars.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leneath	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" crysecpt adulationer choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lenore	н.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.1 In Concentred that the planty infection to planty and under the planty and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I ure the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			. Lassy, 1 urge tre incusion to a unection to ensure rain and equal treatment for an canadian online creators, any manifest or promotion upportunities created by an C-11's implementation must be equally available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any and create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any and create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they create any available to an canadian online creators, no matter where they create any available to an available to available to an available to avail
Leo	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my reedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, 1 volum line to express my strong support for the following gludance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in continuous and the provisions of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in respect to a continuous and the provisions are continuous are continuous are continuous and the provisions are continuous and the provisions are continuous are co
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			2. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leo	0.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requilated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Leon	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementar discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter sloperations of the policy direction:
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTLs directed not to impose regulatior requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" esspect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Leon	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			According to Klaus Schwab who is head of the World Economic Forum where he takes Canada as an example of the over 51% of our elected who are bonafide members of his Global Leaders movement, therefore confirming to all Canadians that our elected are 1000% compromised and following foreign dictates which is tantamount to mass treason and outright traitorism from the Prime Minister down to the local levels of our Canadian system of Government, I hereby demand that the CRTC cease and desist all actions pertaining to any new regulations, bills, laws or dictates of any type for the next 10 years or until such time that our present Government elected are removed from office and independent replacements have successfully been accomplished.
			The very fact that the CRTC has spent so many years fan-dangling the political scene to swindle its way into controlling more and more of the citizens lives shows us all how controlled they are by some power that is not of Canada but by a power who sits in the backrooms of our Nation, pulling the strings of our elected to steer us all into a World of total control.
			We the PEOPLE of Canada refuse to be regulated by a Globalist entity via these local traitors. If this warning goes unheeded, this will simply confirm that our elected have decided to become the enemy of Canadians and our future outcome will be the expression of this refusal when the People will get the last word.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leon	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			I. Firstly, I would like to express y strong support for the following culdinative that have been as a "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Leona	н.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leona		Mocred	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTLs di directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leona	Р.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing social means users and cuestors and the content norm registration from registration (r. (the) "CRCT is directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leonard	S.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leonard	P.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leonard	G.	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available" as it would be very unfair for the CRTC to try and enforce what they want to see instead of us.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them, as we want it to be equally fair for all of the world.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services as it would be a serious disappointment for everyone else.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create as it need to be fair and balanced.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration as it would make it fair, balanced and easier for everyone.
Leonard	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation," or content from regulation, client from regulation, client from regulation, and respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (he) "CKIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leonardo	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Leonardo	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leroy	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (t. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where and what they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Les	Υ.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. Inspirationally social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CKTC is directed to not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			TEXPECT ALL government agencies to be working not for the profit agendas of any industry but for the direct benefits of the consumers, that us the people of Canada.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
les	b.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lesley	N.	Ontario

			As a concepted opera in Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Facility) and Facility Residents Consider the Architecture of the CRIT (Sustainable and Facility).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from resolutation".
			b. exclusing social metals uses and creators and the control a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lesley	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "percentage of the provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. (the) "CKTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lesley	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leslie	Р.	Edward Island	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audionece robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leslie	м.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submilting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leslie	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Prince Edward	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leslie	М.	Edward Island	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";  c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leslie	C.	n

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Leslie-Anne	G.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
levon	k.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liam	н.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed or (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liam	G.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liam	М.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lida	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lidd	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
lidia	K	Ontario

			As a support of Court I are submitted as a support of the Court I are the Cour
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exclusions oxial media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content from regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liisa	s.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lil	F.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LILA	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lilian	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
lilianka	S.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lilianna	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "O' (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lillian	s.	British Columbia

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  5. As a home-based entrepreneur with a fairly new eBay store to support my very small in-home craft store and online craft-a-long teaching platform, this bill has already put me out of business because even my regular students and customers can no long find me and if the do, they are told I am a dangerous link and are forced to fill out a form and prove they are 18+ Apparently, I am dangerous because I am teaching and sending private video links to students so they could use the kits I send them and link in thos a video! made see, for their kit. Periodn.c. consideration that I am teaching all ages, mostly adults with autism how to craft simple projects. I volunteer my time and supplies, all they see is my hands quiding them. I have no interest in a Youtube channel or making money with my video's, where I'm hurt the most is sourcing supplies and attending online auctions to shop. I have more mind aftering channels hitting my feeds than ever before because what I see is no longer my choice based on my search and watched history. I never craef to watch the news with MRMI'd subscribe to cable tv. if that'l a vitant eye are station and their F simultee channel promo adds is not my screen every 15 min. No point in paying YT a Premium fee to avoid ads because my screen time is soaked with MSM ads now anyways. This law makes no sense for anyone. It is in no way going to help the small time content craetors. In a way that obviously was not thought of its absort configuring small brick and mortar businesses access to sourceing because everyone's algorithms are already scrambled because small businesses and artists who craete channels to support their products and services will shut their channels down because they can no long afford to make content for free as no matter how they hustled to put out content, they have lost monetization and ad revenues they earned and are relying on link sharing as opposed to their own hard work to build and retain their audience.
			I'm strongly urging the Canadian Government to rethink this bill as I'm seeingi it, it will bring more harm to the Government than the citizens of the Country they are working for. Governing bodies are human, humans make mistakes, mistakes can be corrected. It is a mistake that should be corrected by the ones who are making this grave mistake to it's Free and Democratic Country.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lilly	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Lincoln	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. (the) "CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundlan	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	н.	d and Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter allow the algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscial media users and creators and their content from requisition", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	Α.	Nova Scotia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	F.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[O'] respect adultance choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	F.	Ouebec	To the post and the time the time the time the time time time time time time time tim

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks drivino small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Linda	E.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liliua		Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Linda	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	c.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions support the introduced guidant on the point," bleecution of the provisions o
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. First J, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			to. Exacuting social metale users and return with regulation, "and the content from regulation," and the content from regulation, and the content from regulation and the content from respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. Excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation; d. and that the CRCTs is directed by "Cyl respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available";
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Linda	н.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT6 is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chow whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Issay) Tuge us in classification of the function of the fun
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter adopthms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any (CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me chose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Listy) 1 by the floor to reals.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	A.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chewther to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be volunt and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. 1359/2 Tug's et inclusión d'é discussión de la cuestra anu equa u estrant un an caracuan omine d'estrat, a primition apportant de la cuestra de quantitat de la caracuan de la cuestra de la caracuan de la cuestra de la caracuan d
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
linda	S.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chewther to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unantinguously, so we unit user access to unescentives.  A lastify. I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty, Tulge the following of a direction to ensure an and equal deathers from an Canadam online clearors, any minarcar or promotion opportunities cleared by an C-113 implementation minus be equally available to an Canadam online clearors, no matter where the choice to reach of the control of the contr
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ul>
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulating from regulating in the programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media user and creators and their content from regulation," c. [the] "CRT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "Cy' expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the optons available."
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulating from regulating in the programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulatings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed ton to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed not to impose regulation regulation, where possible, increase the options available." d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available." 2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dairly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [The JCRTC is directed and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy espect adulence Choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
Linda	S.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Linda	S.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their [ CRT is directed in CRT in piose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed in CRT in piose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed in CRT in piose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed in CRT in piose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed in CRT in piose requirements on online undertaking in respect to programs of social media creators where the policy direction lacks darky on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks pooled to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Linda	S.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their crotnent from regulation", c. [ The J CRT C is directed in to to impose regulatory requirements on oriline undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators "C; o rejected undertaking where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dainly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to
Linda	s.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed in CVIC projects caladine choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chooses whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solid
Linda	S.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [Their] CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choices whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no natter where they choose to create.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  4. Sa concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimize
Linda	S.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed in CVIC projects caladine choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chooses whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solid
Linda	S.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their contant from regulation"; c. [ their CRTC is directed in the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audinence choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choices whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unanabiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solicity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings'; b. "Excluding social media users and
Linda	s.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ Their CRT C is directed to "C) cregated undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT C is directed to "C) cregated undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT C is directed to "C) cregated undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT C is directed to "C) cregated undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT C is directed to "C) cregated undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT C is directed to "C) cregated undertakings clearly and undertaking of the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "implementation discoverability proviosions in a way that minimizes the need to alter
Linda	5.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ their CRT is directed to "Cr (or espect audines" to consider undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRT is directed to "Cr (or espect audines" to chieve chosen where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choses whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks dairly on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they chose to create.  1. Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solicity and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementation discoverability provisions in a
Linda	5.	Alberta	a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [Their CRTC is directed ton to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choices whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. It rust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. To further strengthen the submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version of broadcasting undertakings';  b. Excluding social media users and creators and their cortent from regulatory regula

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation"; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	K.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restroors and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	M.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not be impose regulator yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Linda	т.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	d.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation from regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda	L.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRITC is directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Linda		British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Linda		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
"Eileen"	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Linda M	E.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lindsay	D.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			D. exculaing social media users an creators and meir content from regulation;     (E the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lindsay	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*;
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online directakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lindsay Brian	S.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCRTC is directed by "Cyl respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly. I groe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lindy	Υ.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed "(c)" (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
lisa	d.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
113G	u.	INONG DEOLIG

			As a supposed of the supposed
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and treated safe time from regulation;  (c. [the] "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisa	Α.	Nova Scotia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes he need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the   "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Line	G.	New Brunswick	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LISd	G.	Bruitswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			Implementary discoverations provision in a very late. Imminitizes the need to describe discoveration of the content from regulation?     Evaduring social media users and creators and their content from regulation?     C. [their]CRTC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisa	N.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting understakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisa	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "Cy expects caudience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lisa	к.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisa	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks noised to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lica	F	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisa	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lisa	V.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LISO		Pilotitu	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisa	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework).
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lisa	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where or what they choose to create.  5. I am concerned that your policy is too narrow-minded. For example, as a researcher, it is critical that I have equal access to international internet content - both professional and other - which I feel is threatened by any obligatory Canada-centric policy.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisa	Ε.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Doesd to online expression, I am asking you to solid you and expression and the state of the sta
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from reputation".</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisbeth	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Does to thinke expression, I am aboving you to soliton you for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lise	B	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. First J. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lise	P.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lisette	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] *CRTs id intected not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Litsa	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Livingston	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the   "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Itrust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liz	R.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "c) respect a underince choice and, where possible, increase the options availables"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and social media creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators"; d. "excluding socia
			a. and that the UNIC is directed on (f) respect adulence incirce and, where pussible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Liz	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	_	0.4.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from repulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lizia	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lloyd	H.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c(the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on noile undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lloyd	H.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c, [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Llyod	Α.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			1. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Removing bill c-11 all together would be the best course of action.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Logan	М.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIT' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Laia	В.	0	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Loic	0.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			"becluding social media users and their content from enter user and their content from enter user and their content from regulation",     "becluding social media users and relators and their content from regulation",     [they content is not because of the content from regulation or content from respect of programs of social media creators";     d. had that the CRTC is directed to "C) respect audioned choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lois	w.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lois	J. /	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  Censorship is always a sign of FASCISM. We don't want it and will not accept it. We are free and will remain so, the Nazi/Communist/Fascist Great Reset New World Order notwithstanding.
Lola	Y. 0	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Long	V. (	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lor	R. 0	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscil media users and creators and their content from requisition".
			c. excluding social metal users and creators and their content from regulation;     c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lora	М. г	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lora	D. (	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LUIG	J. (	J. I. Call IV	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CNTC is directed not to impose regulation", call their contents on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. Bit of the the strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Loredana	V	Ontario

			, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalition".
			<ul> <li>exclusing social metals users and creators and meir content from regulation for c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorelei	C.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
lorene	t.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulations," for the content from regulations or content from regulations.  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorene	W.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Loretta	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. exclusing souls inclusion uses a faul extension in the control of the control
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lori	c.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lori	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulator regularements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRI's directed not to impose regulationy" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  Obviously the above is a template, the text and intent of which I whole-heartedly agree with. I have a further comment on this issue, as follows.
			It would seem that hills such as C-11 seem to demand allegiance to Canada. Allegiance to a nation through legislation is a sign of a repressive, communistic regime. It shows that there is fragility in the government's belief that the people have its back.
			In its core is the Marxist belief that the people need to be controlled.
			Canada is a nation of people who are proud to be Canadians. We naturally seek out Canadian news and support our fellow Canadians organically. Legislation such as this shows the government's complete lack of faith in its citizenry. This legislation is a step in the wrong direction to an oppressive, communistic state.
			I have lived in communist countries ruled by fascists. I know how the people feel, and we are feeling the same way. In fact, it seems more restrictive here than it does in China.
			When Google keeps its AI engine (Bard) out of only a few nations, including Canada, Jumping our country in with regimes such as North Korea, there should be pause for concern.
			My heart is broken for Canada.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorin	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRIS directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorlie	C.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version is the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implemental discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter all apportunes of providence in a way that minimizes the need to alter all apportunes of providence in a way.
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei   "CRT's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorlynne	F.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [thei] "CRI's discreted not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. O'utulitary and options the usernition in our ORTC-directed and express to from the control of the plant of the control of insue whee drep those of teat.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Loma	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorna	G.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y enablements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorna	Р.	Alberta

			,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. There was an article in Epoch Times May 11, 2023, discussing whether the CRTC should ban Fox news because of Tucker Carlson's comments about 2SLGBTQ+++++++. Firstly I don't think a lobbing group should be determining what the CRTC should be banning. They are a large lobby for a very small portion of society. Secondly succumbing to to the demands of this group or any other special interest group further seeks and increases the divide amongst Canadians. Finding common ground and seeking ways to support and understand one another is what Canadians need now more themselves one ground and seeking ways to support and understand one another is what Canadians need now more than ever. Diverse one conversation in media and amongs of understand one work things true not limiting peoples access to only one narrative.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorna	D.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"Evacluding oscilal media users and creators and help content from regulation".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] 'CXTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of sould media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			4. Lasty, Tuge Unit Accept to Control of Con
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorna	R.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; b. "Extra Circle id rected not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			C_fine_but Sufficient on this majore; regularly rejunction in a finite function in a finite function in the CRTC is directed into this majore; regularly rejunction chains and where possible, function available?  A and that the CRTC is directed to (C) respect anderence choice and, where possible, functions available?
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and potional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorne	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorne	Α.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures almed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			I believe to be truly free we need unfettered access to sharing and hearing all peoples thoughts and opinions. Please do not interfere with this freedom!  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorne	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorne	T.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lorraine		Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2: of unitary and optional test could be used to the second of the second of the second option option option of the second option optio
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			Trust you will ake my feedback into consideration.
Lorraine	P.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CXTL is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' esspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final variety of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			3.3 in Utility discussed in the back particular was a control of the services around the reputation of the services and the services are the services of the services around the services are the services of the services are the
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorraine	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.    Sizeth   Unsequently   Sizeth   Size
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social order and are creators'; d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' espect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available'. d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c)' espect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1 I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorraine	Н.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's of the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out a cross-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choice whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, one don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorraine	F.	Saskatchewa n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			As a Constitution product of the Constitution
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no mater where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lorraine	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oxidal media users, and reservant more from requisition".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and oxpression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content shoul be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC directed changes to high online alcontinus would then choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			Quite frankly this is a waste of taxpayer money I.e. my money. My preference would be To terminate this initiative immediately. Canadians are smart people and can make their own choices. Stop wasting my money.
orraine	L.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
-			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
orrinda	н.	Alberta
			Please indicate who Bill C-11 benefits. I am completely against the implementation of Bill C-11 as its purpose appears to be to prevent and reduce content for Canadians. Potentially, hinders or prevents online commerce for Canadians, thus, worsening an already challenging economic climate in Canadia. As well as, seemingly, obstructing freedom of information and speech. This Bill presents only as a tool for controlling content for the sake of control in itself. The only beneficiary i can forecast is the Sideshow federal government climate in Lahada. As well as, seemingly, obstructing freedom of information and speech. Inits bill presents only as a tool for controlling content for the sake of control in itself. The only behenciary I can forecast is the Sideshow rederal government of canada.  If I may add, Bill C-18 is equally unnecessary and calls into question the legitimacy of its enactment. Or simply, its legality.
Lorry		Ontario	I will not be duped into agreeing with Bill C-11 in the slightest by providing suggestions for improvement. I question the legitimacy of its existence. The foundation on which it is enacted is inxquesrion

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be volutary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lory	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to user site ime, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work, should let me choice whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			mater where only choose to deate.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louis	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c; the YCRT's silencted not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d, and that CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d, and that CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Louis	м.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louis		Allocita	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louis-David	G.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose requlatory requirements no online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the Inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louis-Marie	K.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
1.01/75			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LOUIS- PHILIPPE	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
LOUIS- PHILIPPE	L.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "exulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			to. Exhaulting social metale users and return contain from registroin.  (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louise	s.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Louise	F.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louise	P.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy ("expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louise	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Louise	Р.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helder content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social menia users and creatives and unent content from regulation /  (c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Love	C.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"Evaluding oscilal media users and creators and help content from regulation".</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			to. Exclusing social metal users and treatest and their content from Egulation i,  (E [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
lowe	U.	Ontario

			As a concerned nerson in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTY (Sustainable and Emiliable Boodessting Doublasse, Foresteenth Mills I consultate the deep
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exacologistical metals are an elementary and the content from Egulation, and the content from Egulation, and the content from Egulation and Content from Egulation a
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luba	к.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a, "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luba	v.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lubo	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed to "C) crepecte audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luc	D.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the RCTC is directed "(c)" (expects adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luc	м.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible), increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
luc	l.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Luc	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concepted person in Canada, Lam submitting my composite on the Order Jesuine Directions to the CRT (Sustainable and Sustainable and Susta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding social metal assets and treative and their Content from regulation;  C [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luca	P.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lucas	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lucas	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lucas	T.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lucas	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lucas	G.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online underkings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Luciano	P.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators":
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
lucie	m.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lucien	G.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0.1.1	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lucien	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person my direction is to SCRAP THIS BILL AND STOP CENSORING WHAT PEOPLE CAN SEE AND THINK
Lucien	V.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. We are not for sensoring content and this is a communist regime that we are rejecting!!
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTs directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lucienne	м.	Quebec
Lucio	S.	Ontario	Please do not hamper Canadian artists who are competing globally for success. C-11 long term I feel will stifle smaller company and independent content creators from success they could achieve if they cover what their audiences desire.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			to. Exclusing social media uses a null result as a function of the control of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lucy	G.	New Brunswick	I am writing to implore you to vote against Bill C-11
			I am suspicious any legislation that its unaccessarily rashed through particularly as there is no deadline. There should have been an opportunity to discuss, debate the various clauses and amendments.  CRTC has fallen short in safequaring freedom of expression therefore. I feel less than assured that they will not ignore freedom of expression ther he future.  Protection does not lie within the Broadcasting Act and the Senate should remove any regulatory powers over it from BIIIC-11 As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Beroadcasting Requisitory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the rispession, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverations; provisions in a way trust immilitates the need of anier alignificant in uncadasating untertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the RCTC is directed to "Or lesseet audience choice and where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			7. days, tage ten inclusion or a vietacination of vietaci
Lucy	м.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "CNIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. days, tage ten inclusion or a function of the state of an acquaint earlier to an Canadian orimine deacos, normalized as positions of positions of the state of
Ludovic	N.	Quebec
Luigi	I.	Ontario	I do no support BIII C-11 in any form. The CRTC and the Canadian Government should not attempt to extend their power to manipulating what has been a historically free domain with digital content. As a Canadian, I want the best content suited to my requirements and I do not care if that content is Canadian based or otherwise. If this bill proceeds, you can rest assured it will factor into me voting for another party come election time.

			As a concepted pages in Charles I am submitting my commonte on the Order Israina Directions to the CRTC (Sushinable and Suitable Susday). While I amount to the Artistic Susday is a submitted of the CRTC (Sushinable and Sushinable Susday).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			C. Exclusing Social medical earlier and regulation;     (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by BIII C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luisa	T.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; a. "implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of proadcasting undertakings"; b. "I was a support of the property of the provisions in a way that minimizes the protons of the provisions of the pro
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Luiz	Р.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRIC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luke	d.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed role; respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luke	F.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "Cy respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Luge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luke	L.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Luke	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks possed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTL is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Luke	м	New Brunswick	As a Canadian Content creator I implore you to take this steps to help me retain my livilhood
LUKE

			I am a concerned individual from Canada, and I wanted to provide my input on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework), While I appreciat.
			direction to address the challenges related to online expression, I kindly request that you strengthen and reinforce these commitments in the final version.
			First and foremost, I want to express my strong support for the following guidance outlined in the policy direction:  a. The implementation of discoverability provisions in a manner that minimizes the need for altering algorithms of broadcasting undertakings.
			b. Exclusion of social media users, creators, and their content from regulation.  C. The direction given to the CRTC to refrain from imposing regulatory requirements on online undertakings concerning programs of social media creators.
			d. The directive to respect audience choice and expand available options whenever possible.  To further enhance these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is essential that the final version of the policy direction unequivocally prohibits across-the-board algorithm alteration. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional for users like myself. Moreover, any changes directed by the CRTC to online algorithms should allow users to decide whether to utilize them.
			I have concerns regarding the lack of clarity in the policy direction regarding which services should be subject to regulation. Ambiguity in this matter may result in the exclusion of small and niche foreign services from Canada. It is crucial that the final direction clearly and unambiguously defines the appropriate scope of online undertakings, ensuring that we do not lose access. As these valuables services.
			Lastly, 1 urge you to include a directive that guarantees fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. It is essential that any financial or promotional opportunities resulting from the implementation of Bill C-11 are accessible to all Canadian online creators, reparalless of their chosen platform.
			I trust that you will take my feedback into serious consideration.
Luke	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Luna	В.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lund	5.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lutz	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>ineplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*;</li> <li>inequal moderability and reactions and derectors and their content from regulation*;</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in "CRTC is directed to ()" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  (in the contraction of the
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms works should let me choice whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lydia	R.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and "I CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
lyle	a.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and that the CRC is threeted to (c) respect administed choice and, where possible, increase the options available:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lyle	H.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			natter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lyn	J.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lynda	В.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a very concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. We are adults. We can make our own decision.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and restors and their content from requisition".
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
	-	British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynda	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, 1 would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		Saskatchewa	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lyndsay	K.	n	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following dialace in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynn	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreion services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			*. 2507, Talgo the Incubation of a binection of a b
Lynn	A.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and creators and creators"; d. "excluding social media users and creators and creat
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynn	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalition".
			D. exclusing social miercula users and creators and meir content from regiunation in c. (t.)     City ("End") ("End") ("End directed not to impose regulator yequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";     d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lypp	c	Calcombia

			Assessment and the Control Lorentz Holling and the Control Control Holling Control Con
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynn	D.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynn	Р.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			1. It is style in the consequence of sequence of the control of th
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lynn	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Ly		Coldinoid	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation" requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Lynn and Anthony	c.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynne	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  8. Subparentiating discovery.Direction of the following support of the following suppo
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
lynne	c.	Manitoba	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. an unit unit cut is to unit to the cut is a unit
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynno	_	Alberto

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynne	J.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and wheir content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options availables'.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is cruciall that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Lynne	3.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a work that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Lynus	E.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
,			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [ their "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online netrakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the KRTC is directed "Cy' (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
м	н.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
м	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online netrikings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "O' (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
м		Manitoha	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		, identition	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     (thei) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration. Thank you,
м	Ρ.	British Columbia

			A COLOR OF THE COL
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			b. Excluding Sucial metal users and Learn was a funded in Charles (1911) and the CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
M Dale	w.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
м	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
м.	3.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
M. (Greta)	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
M. (Greta)	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be repulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
M.G.	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
			Over regulating markets never really works out well. It often causes more unforseen issues. Such as Social media firms refusing to carry news content in our region. This is extremely counter production in our current information age.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mac	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to dimine expression, I aim asking you of soliding and eminance unset commitments in the limit version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverations provisions in a way that immittees the need of after algorithms to undertakings; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KCRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Madelaine	s	Alberta

			A COUNTY OF THE PROPERTY OF TH
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings';
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Madison	K	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
riduison	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] 'CRIC' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Magda	Р.	Ontario	Firstly, I enjoy radio the most but Television has offered my family many opportunities as well. With the new technologies, I note sporadic bad journalism ( without reservation or without any real inductive thinking) and increasing misinformation.
			I also want more Canadian content which has been underfunded. When competitive companies offer entertainment and have better tax advantages than similar Canadian companies, I see red. Sorry but there is a justice problem here. Canadians are known to be less dynamically competitive but are also responsible for some of the most important innovations through creativity in all sectors.
			Children still love TV. So tic toc (as an example) comes a close second in the modern age for youth, but parents can't supervise 24/7 so I would appreciate good guidelines for content, especially when I see flash illicit imagery breaking through the interface on occassion. This tells me that content does not have a strong enough firewall. It needs it at both ends. Also, I note some moon hour programs are definitely adult content only. Try telling a single parent how to control the media in their home. This reality is not even considered.
			CRTC should advocate for a sliding scale on cost to certain disadvantaged sectors of society. There is much learning to be had from media but not if its seeking only a popular response. It needs to become thought provoking as a personal challenge for personal growth, the way excellent books do (of course this century has not produced many of those incredible authors either). Young people are very confused with a common answer "I don't know". Wow! they need real life heroes, not just sensational ones, to establish their own characters. So mellow and irresponsible a society we are becoming. Media has a huge role in this. You have a huge role in this so maybe it's about time you changed your vision a bit? How about opening opportunities for good passionate future leaders? Or create characters to help to mediate some of our chronically growing mental health crisis.  Having said this, I also endorse some of the concerns expressed below. There is still not enough balance in the plan to prevent abuse of freedoms. I always think if someone wants to ride the outside rails they will find a way to do it. But the comments below are very thought provoking and should be considered. My own personal thoughts end here.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c.   Percent   CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the (RTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Magee	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Maggie	М.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (_ [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Maggie	т.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
nayyie		Colullible	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [.the] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulation y on undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marini		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maggie	L.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maha

Learning to the control of the contr				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
Part				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
E. In the Land College of the Colleg				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
For a state of the				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
Service of the process of the proces
The second secon				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Part				Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
And Services of the control of the c
Leading the second of the seco	Mahmood	T.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While Language the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
Services of the control of the contr				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
As a series of the series of t				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
Fig. 1. Sept. 1. Sept. 2. Sept				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
Part				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
The second power to record the control process of the control proces				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
No. 10 Part
Part	Mai	E.
Service of the content of the conten				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
Company of the compan				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
to structure and optional possess the major and profit of characters and profit of profit of the profit of profit of the profit of profit of the profit of the profit of profit of the p				c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
In comment on the period printed to the period printed to the page printed to the page printed to period printed to the page printed to period printed to the page printed to period printed to
Luty, Luty the following or distriction to count for and equal residence for all Canadian cells creaters, And fishered or promotion goodwards created by BIII C.11's imprendiction must be equally workfolds to all Canadian cells creaters, and fishered in consideration.  The provided late and provided in the provided of the county of the c				3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Internal Principles of Laboratory and Laboratory Processors (Laboratory Republication Processors) (White I approximate the draft policy directory efforts to editions the real Principles of Control P				4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no Assembly and the second partners in Casacla. I am administry my comments on the Chiral Learning Directions to the CTIC (Continuedae) regulatory framework). While I appreciate the drift priviley developed in a policy direction as a policy direction in a policy dire Action  No. 5000  No. 5000	Maki	K.
The common process of the common process				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
2. To further description these commitments to individual chains and expension. It is counted that the follower shows of the pulsing derivation rates on description. Any measures alread at promoting Canadian content changes from the shows and applications. As in concernment that the pulsing derivation rates of them.  3. The concernment that the pulsing derivation rates of the shows and the regulated, and misks driving mail and mich formings services and of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scape of online undertakings deathy and unamanguated, by the C11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian orbits or a security of the pulsing of the control of the pulsing design of the pulsing of the pulsi				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
1. The concerned that the policy develope lacks delay on which services about 5 be required, and risks driving small and notice foreign services out of Caresto. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unablewance the lack of caresto. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unable members that provides to consideration.  New Sortis  New Sortis  New Sortis  I have possible to online operations. It is evaluating my communicate in the Other Equal provides to the Careston of the operation of the operation of the policy direction is allowed to sortine operations. It is evaluating my communicate on the Other Equal provides to the Careston of the operation operaturities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian ordine creators. Any financial or promotion operaturities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian ordine creators. Any financial or promotion operaturities created by Bill C-11's implement				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be well-unlikely and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy almost that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be well-unlikely and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes in box policy and ontitional to users like the policy and ontitional to users like the policy and the polic
4. Lats), Targe the inclusion of a direction to a search far and equal treatment for all Canadian oritine creators. Any financial or premotion opportunities created by BII C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian oritine creators, no anxiety for the control of the con				3.1/m concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
I but you will take my feedback into consideration.  Nova Scotia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the CRIZ (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the drift policy direction's efforts to address the risks pool of confidence persons. In a major you to selding and enhance these commitments in the final variety.  I Firstly, I would like the superson my crange appoint for the following palatine in the policy direction.  I Firstly, I would like the superson my crange appoint for the following palatine in the policy direction.  I Firstly, I would like the superson my crange appoint for the following palatine in the policy direction.  I Firstly, I would like the superson my crange appoint for the following palatine in the policy direction.  I firstly, I would like the superson of the following palatine in the policy direction.  I firstly, I would like the superson of the following palatine in the policy direction.  I firstly, I would like the policy direction and superson of the control of the superson of the control of the superson of the following palatine in the firstly my comments and superson of the following palatine in the first in white the first and palatine in the first in white the first and palatine in the first in white the first and palatine in the first in white the first and palatine in the first in white the first in the firs				Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
No. No. Sector  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to conine expression, I am activity by used (list to experience these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would list to experience my strong apport for the following quintous in the policy direction of programs of cool immediate and their content from regulatory.  2. The further strangther, these commitments in influence of the policy direction in posed to online expression, I am adding you to solidly and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firsty, I model lite to express my strong supports for the following guidance in the policy direction rules out across the board alporithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be regulated, and making you to solidly and enhance these commitments to indicate the policy direction rules out across the board alporithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be regulated, and making you to solidly and enhance these contentments to include almost an appropriate section of entire deportance and the policy direction rules out across the board alporithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be not across to these controlled and the policy direction rules out across the board alporithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be not across to these controlled and the policy direction rules out across the board alporithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be not across to these services.  2. The number of the policy direction lack Cacity on within services should be regulated, and recision of the policy direction rules out across the board alporithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be not be policy of the policy direction in rules for the policy direction in the	Malcolm	м.	Nova Scotia
A "Implementating discoverability provisions in a very that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  c) the College of the Col				posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
2. To further strongthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, its crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and options to users like me, and yCRTC-directed hadpes to how can desport them was to entirely and unanalogoously, so we don't lose access to the order agreement that the policy direction is described to entire the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction and the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction and the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction of the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction in the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction in the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction in the policy direction is an advantage of the policy direction in the policy dir				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
2. In concerned that the policy direction betak catrly to which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unarrainguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lestly, 1 unge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no Intrust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to oppress my strong upstore for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. The further strengthing discoverability provious in a saw from the guidance of the policy direction.  3. Incomment that the policy direction on a configuration and provided and the policy direction and the policy direction on the policy direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unarnabiguously, so we don't be access to these services.  4. Lestly, I unge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal breatment for all Canadian online creators, no antater where they choices to create.  4. Lestly, I under the the policy direction on saws fair and equal breatment for all Canadian online creators, no antater where they choices to create.  5. The polic				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
4. Lastly, I use the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  1. Ontario  1. In Turs you will lake my feedback into consideration.  2. The Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the fellowing guidance in the final version.  3. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  4. C. (Inh) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  4. In an interpret of the control of the con				3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
Halcolm H. Ontario  Alacolm H. Ontario  Alacolm H. Ontario  As concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am eaking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidence in an algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulatory."  c. (Ithe) "CRTC is directed for (1) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the uptions available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is cruical that the final version which several policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional tous testis like me, and any RTCT-circted changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarify on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose accesses to these services so these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where this process to create.  1. I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  3. I'm support the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators in the final version.  4. I Firstly, I would like to express my group for the following guid				Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
H. Ontario  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to ceiline expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I visual like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I visual like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. For the strengthen these commitments or online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  3. In concerned that the policy direction indicates and the policy direction indicates and the voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms with should be to evoluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms with should be requisited, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't be access to these services to how online algorithms with should be considerable and an advantage of the policy direction of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no malter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  2. In further they choose to create.  3. In concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I, am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  2				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed to To impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed in (1) crapacet audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online days evoluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online days evoluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online days evoluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online days evoluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to the content of t	Malcolm	н.	Ontario
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. recluding social media acress and creators and their content from regulation", c. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you till take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alterati				As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRIC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darily on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I used like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C(c) respect caudience choice and, at every opportunity, increase the options available";  c. I further strength				a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and mechanic these commitments in all version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. 'excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation', c. [the] 'CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators';  d. and that the CRTC is directed to '(c) respect adulence choice and, at every opportunity, increase the options availables'.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how onlined, and potential to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how disolud let me choose whether to make us				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services. 4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these comminments in the final version.  1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators.  2. To further strengthen these comminments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canad				3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
matter where they choose to create.  British Columbia  As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'rectuling social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in sepact of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adulence choice and, at every opportunity, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how also under langionithms works should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I grupe the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
Are concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction of the following guidance in the policy direction of the policy of the commitment of the commi				matter where they choose to create.
posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to expose my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to after algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media sers and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect underce choice and, at every opportunity, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. Tim concerned that the policy direction tacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.	Malcolm	v.	British Columbia
a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. 'recluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements and, at every opportunity, increase the options available."  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRIC-directed changes to how classification algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> <li>Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.</li> </ol>				a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
<ol> <li>I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.</li> <li>4. Lasty, 1 urgo the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.</li> </ol>				2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.				be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
matter where they choose to create.				unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.				matter where they choose to create.
Asicolm M. Nova Scotia			Nava Castia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mandy	F.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mandy	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Manuel	3.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users are regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Manuel	d.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			Does do online personnel and a variable of the second of t
			a. "Implementing discoverable provided in a plant of the provided in the polymer production of the provided in the polymer provided in the polymer production of the provided in the provided
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Manuela	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding sooil media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc	G.	New Brunswick	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and "or "(or "pespect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc	Т.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			in mipletiening discover annity provision in a very time minimizes time net or disent agricultural provision in a very time minimizes time net or disent agricultural provision in the provision of the minimizes time net or disent provision in the provision of the provision
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
marc	-	Ontonia

			As a concepted across in Canada Law submitting my comments on the Order Insuing Directions to the CPTC (Sustainable and Suitable Sustainable Sustainab
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from results to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from results to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from results are under the property of the minimized the property of
			b. exclusing solar intensit users and creation and term continuous for the continuous and term continuous
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I upg the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc	D.	Ontario	As a concerned according Constant I are submitted my comments on the Order Equips Directions to the CPTC Containable and Equiphale Residenting Regulatory Engaged While I appropriate the draft policy directions's effect to address the circle.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings in a support of the su
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc	S.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and their content of the c
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marc	T.	Saskatchewa n
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Q' respect adulence choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc-Andre	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulation; b. "excluding accolal media users and creators and their content from regulation; discoverable and account of the second and account of the second
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy discress in these services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unannihinously, so we don't lose acress in these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc-André	В.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRCT is directed to "follower provisions" as way their expectations of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRCT is directed to "follower choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRCT is directed to "follower choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final resist of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			Trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marc-Olivier	T.	Quebec	swam for mil one my recorded mer consideration.

			As a concepted person in Canada, Law submitting my comments on the Order Israina Directions to the OPTC (Surbinable and Emiliate Conduction Con
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "exulution social media users and preators and help content from regulation"
			to. Exclusing social metal users and treatest and user content from Egulation ;  (c) the j "CRTs districted not to impose regulation; requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcel	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; by the provision of the prov
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcel	D.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and helder content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			<ul> <li>excluding social means users an oreators and their content from regulation ,</li> <li>(E) (The) "CRIT is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRIT is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastiv. I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcello	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy (expect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcie	S.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [ the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "(c)" (expects audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcio	м.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambininusly, so we don't lose acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
marck- adrien	r.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marco		Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create the contract of the contrac
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marco	C.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to diffine expression, 1 and asking you to solitory and reliance times commitments in the many version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support of the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
marco	s.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  ([the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strenothen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			5.1 Thi Control to the Dip Ording of the services account of the services around the s
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
marco	c.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users it like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marco	G.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT Lis directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C)" cryssect audionece choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. and that the LRTC is directed to (c) respect adminiscurpolate and where possible, increase the options available .  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create d and	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcus	М.	Labrador	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, 1 am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requiation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRT-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
marcus	h.	Alberta
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRT Ls directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcy	S	Columbia

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marcy	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ridicy	J.	Coldinold	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CNET is directed not to impose requisitory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be repulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marcy	N.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mardi	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c)" respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marek	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the alteration of algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, by default, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marek	K.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing Social metal osers and treative and their content from regulation;  C [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marg	T.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Margaret	G.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a support of court of Court of the support of the Court of the Cour
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "evulution social media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and user content front regulation /  c. the j "CRTs is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no noline undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	w.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be reculated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Margarot	L.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social modia users and creators and their content from regulation".  L'ethe "CRTS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C) erspect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed "O' (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	D.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			b. Exclusing social mental users and creators and user content from regulation."  C [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulatory requirements no nine undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and imambininusly, so we don't here acress to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	F.	Manitoba	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to *C) crepacte audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  The control of the control of th
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	Α.	British Columbia

			As a concepted person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Development on the Order Irruina Directions to the CRIT (Sustainable and Emilable Development).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft,
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that iminitizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "sevulution sortal media users and reactors and their content from regulation".
			b. Exclusing Social mental users and creators and unent content from regulation /, c. [the] "CRIS is directed not to impose regulation; requirements on online understakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastyl, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	к.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; a. Implementary discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. Interest the provisions of t
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust vou will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	S.	British Columbia
			As a citizen of Canada (born and raised), I am submitting my comments on Bill 11 Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version. Bill c-11 opens the door and lays the groundwork to limit free speech and censorship of any disapproval to government policy.
			1. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; d. "and that the KCRT is directed to "(c) respect adjected conclusions content and any other possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	F.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a vay that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed in to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margaret	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and their content from receives the options available." d. and that the KCTC is directed to "(c) respect audience robice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margarita	F.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requilation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margery	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks nosed to online excression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [thei] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience zolice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I uge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margery	C.	British Columbia

			As a concerned necron in Canada I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the COTY (Sustainable and Equilable Department on Department of Course Inches Inch
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Margo	М.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambliguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
margot	w.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
_			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marguerite	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			<ul> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marguerite	1.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c) the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	Α.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [C thei] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	М.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	c	Ontonio

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online thereisings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	0.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Maria	S.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter, where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of hem.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Maria	T.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			b. Exclusing social metal osers and treators and unlet content from regulation; a content from regulation; a content from regulation; a content from respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To truther sterighten insect communication involvabil functional degrees with a contract of the policy direction insect our minimum in the about product and a contract of the policy direction in the policy direction in the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Maria	М.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	G.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings*; b. excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation*; b. according social media users and creators and their content from regulation*; d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect suddence choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Maria	н.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available!
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Maria	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media users and creators and where possible, increase the options available." d. and that the KRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Maria	м.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty. I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [thei] "CRIT's directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Maria		Overt	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Eugenia	R.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRT's directed not to impose regulator requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			2. To trule a schiptor these continuous of unable and expression, its student as the market should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marian	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; c. [the   "CRI.5" is directed not to impose resultatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mariana	C.	Ontario

			As a proposed agree in Canada, Lam submitting my composite on the Order Jesuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developing Composition (Canada Lam submitting my composite on the Order Jesuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Emiliable Developing Composition).
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from requalition".
			b. Exclusing social miscus and users
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marianna	D.	British Columbia	At a conserved across in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Insuine Directions to the Order Insuine Direction of Order Insuine Directions to the Order Insuine Direction of Order Insuine Directions to the Order Insuine Direction of Order Insuine Directions to the Order Insuine Direction of Order Insuine Directions to the Order Insuine Direction of Order Insuine Directions to the Order Insuine Direction of Order Ins
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to the impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "C!" expect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marianna	v.	British Columbia
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marianne	V.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverbality provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [their CRTC is directed to the impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and 'that the CRTC is directed to 'Cg' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available". d. d
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create. Freedom from censorship, from surveillance, and punishment for exercising our God given rights in the CRAC is my fervent hope will be taken note of and quaranteed in Bill C-11.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marianne	В.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC's directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marie	D.	Nova Scotia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
ridire	J.	Nova Scotta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marie	D.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs id retected to to impose regulation y cut on impose regulation y content from respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marie	м.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a concentral corresponding the control of the co
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:         <ul> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>"excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ul> </li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marie (	c.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";</li> </ol>
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marie-Claire [	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "CRIC" is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across the board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marie-			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Claude L	L.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. Timplementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";     b. "decluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",     c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marie-Laure (	r	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Have Educe (	u.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marie-Luce L	L.	Quebec
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c [the] "RTIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			It is not certain that the policy uneccon lacks carry or minute severes show the regulated, and task alwing small and incher overgine excess to the calculate. The minute that the policy uneccon make the dependence of the calculate of the c
			matter where they choose to create.
Marielle 1	м.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding oscila media users and creators and help content from repulsation"
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			a. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mariko I		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, 1 urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I fear that you are not taking care to help Canadian people know and understand the implications of not being able to access all Canadian content. I fear that you are not standing on guard for what my/our country needs.
Marilee	I.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed on to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available."
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Marilyn	В.	Saskatchewa n	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			a. an unature EXTCS unletted to (C) respect sources current entropy can be a considered and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marilyn	Υ.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CNTC is directed to to impose regulationy requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect adiagnices choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MARILYN	R.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(C) respect audionec choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		0.3334	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marilyn	N.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding soil media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "[C] respect audionise choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MARILYN	R.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy feet content of the services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambioususly, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
		British

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marilyn	F.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks darity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Marina	S.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marina	5.	Columbia	I appreciate that the comments below were not written by me, but I am sending them because I agree with every single one of them, and I want you to be on our side and to work for us NOW.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marina	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mario	P.	Quebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mario	r.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> <li>d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".</li> </ul>
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mario	Р.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mario	R.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			posed to dimine expression, I am asking you discinding an emanded trase communication in the mina version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  [the] "CRI's directed not impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mario	C.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			V
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MARIO	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (thei "NCR' is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marion	L.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marion	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marj	В.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marja	Р.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lasty, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marjorie	S.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation".
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			5. "A nation that is afraid to let its people judge the truth & falsehood in an Open Market - is a nation that is afraid of its people" JFK 1962
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
marjorie	c.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			a. Implementing discoverability provisions and where the state algorithms of productioning specific provisions and their content from requirements require to after algorithms of productions and their content from requirements on confine understating is respect of programs of social media creators";  c. [the] CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  d. d
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3.1'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Marjorie- Anne	S.	Quebec	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and reators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed to not to impose regulator y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "Cy' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
		Newfoundian	matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	R.	d and Labrador
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTL is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	м.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available", d. and that the CRT. is directed to "for respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available",
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mark	a.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; c. (the) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mark	w.	New Brunswick
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", (Ethe) "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me chose whether to make use of hem.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mark	6.	Ouebec	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.

			As a second control of the second control of
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft, posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			to. Exacional social metals uses and return contains and the contain north regulation in C. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online understaings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, Lurge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	В.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:  a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";  b. "excluding social media users and creators and help content from repulation";
			c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	В.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MARK	K.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Direction's to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to 'Cy (respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	S.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			<ol> <li>To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.</li> </ol>
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	W.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks noted for notifine expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "XRI's directed not to impose regulation requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mark	w.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. (the) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	P.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. the "CRTC is directed to "Cy) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mark	Υ.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
TIGIK		Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidity and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "Natio is directed not to impose regulation y on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	G.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulation", requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			inster where uses to desire.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	м.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and in *CRTC is directed to *Cyc respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
MARK	Α.	Ontario
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertaking clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
MARK	В.	Ontario	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Truck	5.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings":
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requisited, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
mark	L.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	P.	Ontario

			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firsty, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	D.	Ontario	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	C.	Alberta	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTs directed not be impose regulator yrequirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be requiated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.
Mark	т.	Alberta	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",  (Ethe) "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";  d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiquously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			**************************************
			I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	S.	British Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.  1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following quidance in the policy direction:
			a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation";
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	D.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks nosed to notine expression. I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			a. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", [. thei "Toxic is directed not to impose regulation y requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
Mark	В.	British Columbia	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			<ol> <li>Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:</li> <li>"implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";</li> </ol>
			b. *excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.  4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no
			matter where they choose to create.  I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	G.	British Columbia

			As a concerned person in Capada. Lam submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Proadcasting Regulatory Examples of the deaft
			As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation", cc. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the CRTC is directed to "(c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.  3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	C.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction:     a. "Implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings";
			<ul> <li>b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",</li> <li>c. [the] "CRIC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators";</li> </ul>
			d. and that the CRTC is directed to (c) respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available.  2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should
			be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
Mark	H.	Columbia	As a concerned person in Canada, I am submitting my comments on the Order Issuing Directions to the CRTC (Sustainable and Equitable Broadcasting Regulatory Framework). While I appreciate the draft policy direction's efforts to address the risks
			posed to online expression, I am asking you to solidify and enhance these commitments in the final version.
			1. Firstly, I would like to express my strong support for the following guidance in the policy direction: a. "implementing discoverability provisions in a way that minimizes the need to alter algorithms of broadcasting undertakings"; b. "excluding social media users and creators and their content from regulation",
			c. [the] "CRTC is directed not to impose regulatory requirements on online undertakings in respect of programs of social media creators"; d. and that the KRTC is directed to '(c)' respect audience choice and, where possible, increase the options available".
			2. To further strengthen these commitments to individual choice and expression, it is crucial that the final version of the policy direction rules out across-the-board algorithm alteration entirely. Any measures aimed at promoting Canadian content should be voluntary and optional to users like me, and any CRTC-directed changes to how online algorithms work should let me choose whether to make use of them.
			3. I'm concerned that the policy direction lacks clarity on which services should be regulated, and risks driving small and niche foreign services out of Canada. The final direction must define the appropriate scope of online undertakings clearly and
			unambiguously, so we don't lose access to these services.
			4. Lastly, I urge the inclusion of a direction to ensure fair and equal treatment for all Canadian online creators. Any financial or promotion opportunities created by Bill C-11's implementation must be equally available to all Canadian online creators, no matter where they choose to create.
		British	I trust you will take my feedback into consideration.
